WORLD'S GREAT THINKERS

In Four Volumes • Boxed
Retail Price $1000

From the works of PLATO and ARISTOTLE and CONFUCIUS to those of FREUD in our own day—here are philosophies that men live by. In them you will find wisdom and guidance from over forty of the world's greatest thinkers, in writings as helpful and as important today as they ever were.

This is the full beginning volume (800 pages) of the long-awaited history of the Second World War, from the one person in the world best fitted to write it. It will surely take its place among the great historical writings of all time. Its importance cannot be overestimated. No one of us can hope to understand fully the momentous times in which we have had the destiny and privilege to live, without reading this book. At the same time, as pure reading, its fascination can hardly be excelled. For men and women of today this book is like obtaining, to be treasured forever for one's children and their children, Gibbon's The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire when that memorable work was first published.

In all probability you have intended to buy this great book of Winston Churchill; and—as in the case of so many new books—you are likely to neglect to do so through sheer procrastination, and confess sadly to friends months hence: "I never got around to reading it."

This advantageous offer is made frankly to induce you to overcome that procrastination and order the book now. At the same time it shows the marked advantages of belonging to the Book-of-the-Month Club.

You keep yourself from missing the books, like this one, you want to read. You buy from the Club only those you want—no others. And you have a wide choice, from forty to fifty books a year. For, in addition to the Book-of-the-Month selected by the Club's five judges each month, the Club makes available many Special Members' Editions of important books.

Your only obligation is to buy as few as four of these in any twelve-month period. You pay no more than the publisher's retail price, frequently less. That is all you pay—there are no fees or dues; and for every two such books you buy you receive one of the Club's book-dividends.

These are fine library volumes, like this fourvolume set offered to you here, as a demonstration. Last year the Club's members received $16,000,000 worth of free books. Is it not good sense to join the Club now, and share in the book-dividends, at the same time paying less for the books you want than you would otherwise?

REFUGEES wait to board a CAT plane in Mukden rescue of 7,000.

CHENNAULT FLIES AGAIN

by WILLIAM P. GRAY

The newest and liveliest little airline in China is the one founded and run by General Claire Chennault, formerly head of the "Flying Tigers," and it is unquestionably the most rugged rough-and-tumble flying show in the world. Called CAT, for Civil Air Transport, it has now been in operation for a year, and for hard flying and hairbreadth escapes it is matched only by Terry and the Pirates, from the pages of which many of its young ex-Army, Navy or Marine Corps fliers might have sprung. CAT started out with 15 transport planes bought from surplus stocks, and its pilots flew some $20 million worth of UNRRA supplies from Canton and Shanghai to China's remote interior in their first year of operation, bringing back such oddly assorted native cargoes as tung oil, silver bullion, hog bristles, goatskins and honeydew melons planted from seeds distributed in 1944 by Henry Wallace. They totaled 13,456 hours of flying without a major mishap, but some of their operations would have made any normal airline man's hair turn white between take-off and landing.

Once, for example, when an engine failed, Pilot Robert Rousselot kept his plane aloft only by ditching $48 billion (about $1.5 million U.S.) worth of Chinese banknotes which he was hauling for the Central Bank of China. The bank ultimately recovered about $12 billion; the rest of it, fluttering down into the unbelieving hands of Kweichow Province peasants, disappeared.

Another job, called by the pilots "Operation Bo-Peep," required the hauling of 625 New Zealand sheep by air from Nanking to Lanchow and Peiping for UNRRA. Said one pilot, "It was easy when you didn't have any rams aboard. Most of the passengers were ewes, and we had to haul them in mating season." On take-off, with the airplane as fragrant as a corral in Wyoming, the sheep leaned forward like sailors into a stiff wind, relaxing again when the plane leveled. Occasionally they jumped a rear fence and wandered around in the tail of the C-46, making the plane drag and sway until the copilot herded them forward once more.

Just before the North China railroad junction city of Shihchiachuang fell to the Communists last November, Chennault's fliers moved out 200 orphaned children, 63 Trappist monks and eight cows which the refugees insisted on taking. One flight from Shihchiachuang produced a unique hazard: a cow broke out of its corral of cotton bales and wandered into the cockpit; she was shoved and pulled (by the tail) back into place with considerable difficulty.

More recently one plane nosed over in a short-field landing at Mukden during CAT's most spectacular undertaking -the evacuation of 7,000 Chinese civilians in 42 days from that beleaguered Manchurian city. But nobody was injured, and the plane was later repaired. A more nerve-racking experience fell to Captain Ernest Loane one day in April over northwest China. At 8,000 feet he learned that a Chinese passenger was about to have a baby. He took his plane up to 11,000 for calm flying, and the woman delivered a healthy child. When they reached Lanchow, she walked off the plane unassisted.

Chennault's transports until recently were marked with a tiger kitten on the nose, a decoration linking the memory of the Flying Tigers with the present arduous life of the CAT.

I Wear False Teeth

yet my mouth feels fresh, clean and cool

No "DENTURE BREATH" for me"

"Every day I soak my plates in a solution of Polident and water. My mouth feels clean and cool . . . and no Denture Breath!"

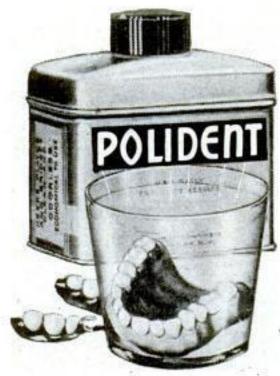

Mrs. R. F. M., Denver, Colo.

WHEN plates taste bad—feel hot and heavy in your mouth, watch out for "Denture Breath", the oral disturbance that comes from improper cleansing. False teeth need the care of a special denture cleanser—POLIDENT. Safe, easy, quick, Polident leaves your plates feeling clean, cool and fresh. No fear of offensive "Denture Breath".

And remember, Polident keeps your false teeth more natural looking—free from offensive odor, too. For a smile that sparkles, for a mouth that feels cool, clean and fresh soak your plates in Polident every day.

Polident comes in two sizes—regular and large economy size—available at all drugstores. It costs only about a cent a day to use, so get a can of Polident tomorrow, sure.

This has been changed to a simpler insigne built around the Chinese character for "civil." A few of his Flying Tigers are still with Chennault, among them Ace Joe Rosbert, who shot down seven Japs and is now CAT director of operations. Most of the pilots, though, are newer fliers, and like other Americans on China's two bigger airlines they confess to one great lure-money. While they might be making $300 a month as co-pilots in the U.S., they can quickly average $1,500 monthly as first pilots in China, and this without taxes since China's income tax is virtually nothing and U.S. taxes are eliminated by their residence abroad.

The recent rescues at the walled city of Weihsien, a rail center in Shantung Province, topped the resplendent list of CAT's wacky adventures. In Chennault's absence from China the rescue operation was directed from the U.S. Marines' air station at Tsingtao by Vice President "Whitey" Willauer.

One day early in April, six hours after two of Chennault's American pilots had flown to Weihsien on a business mission, a Red army unit suddenly struck outside the city walls. cutting off even the nearby airfield. The Americans, Captain Alvin L. Burridge, CAT's northern manager, and First Officer John R. Plank, started planning their own rescue. They scraped out a meager 400-foot 'landing strip' for light planes inside the city. It had a dog-leg turn in it, and it was necessary to fly between two buildings 50 feet apart on take-off. Nevertheless another of Chennault's pilots, Richard B. Kruske, landed the first rescue plane, an L-5, and took Burridge aboard. On takeoff one wing hit a building, and the L-5 crashed. Neither Kruske nor Burridge was injured, but that left a new total of three to be rescued.

The three stranded Americans started building a longer runway. On the following day Captain Edwin L. Trout flew in to try the new runway and broke his propeller. That made four to be rescued. A CAT transport showed up overhead and dropped a new propeller by parachute. With the new prop installed and all hands holding their breath the first rescue was finally accomplished —with Kruske at the controls and Burridge as passenger.

LIFE'S REPORTS CONTINUED Now only two remained in Weihsien. A few hours later Captain Rousselot of banknote fame landed another L-5, borrowed from the Marines at Tsingtao. Close behind came a young man from Illinois named Marshall Staynor, flying a Piper Cub. Once again Weihsien held four Americans-Plank, Trout, Rousselot and Staynor -but they had two airplanes among them. While Weihsien watched, Staynor took Trout aboard, buzzed down the rough, new 600-foot runway-and made it. Now only Plank and Rousselot remained. Rousselot. a big man, took a lightweight passenger, a Chinese traffic manager, aboard his L-5. All alone Plank watched. The runway was not long enough. Rousselot, one of CAT's best pilots, piled up the L-5 at the end of the airstrip. Score: two pilots stranded again, no airplanes. Staynor and his Cub tried to remedy this situation by returning a couple of hours later. The Cub settled down, bounded along and—wham! broken propeller. From a transport overhead came another prop by parachute, and the Cub was repaired. This time Plank tried, without a passenger, and succeeded, leaving Weihsien for the first time since he and Burridge had started the whole adventure. Rousselot and Staynor were still there, but Kruske came back for Staynor. That left Rousselot, alone and in greater jeopardy than any of them.

It was then that one or more CAT transports took off from Tsingtao with a cargo, the exact nature of which is obscure. Shortly after on this dramatic night there were transport planes over Weihsien dropping flares and other, noisier objects. General Chennault's office has studiously underplayed the rescue, saying officially that some of the boys dropped a few beer bottles along with the flares—just for effect.

In any event, in the clear light of the following morning it was observed that the situation was easier around Weihsien. The Communists had not yet entered the city. Staynor flew a Cub in, and Kruske took in an L-5. Both landed safely. The big man, Rousselot, got into the Cub alone. Both planes took off safely. The Weihsien rescues were concluded. A few days later the Communists took the city.

GREER GARSON TAKES A DEEP BREATH AND EXTENDS HER LEG AS SHE BEGINS A DIFFICULT BALANCING TRICK IN "JULIA MISBEHAVES"

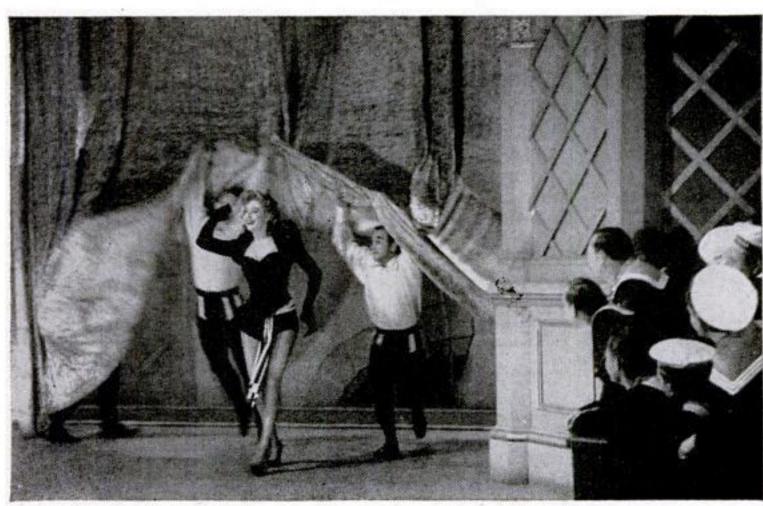

POUR PARTNERS SUSPEND A TRANSPILL GREEK GARSON IN MID-AIR

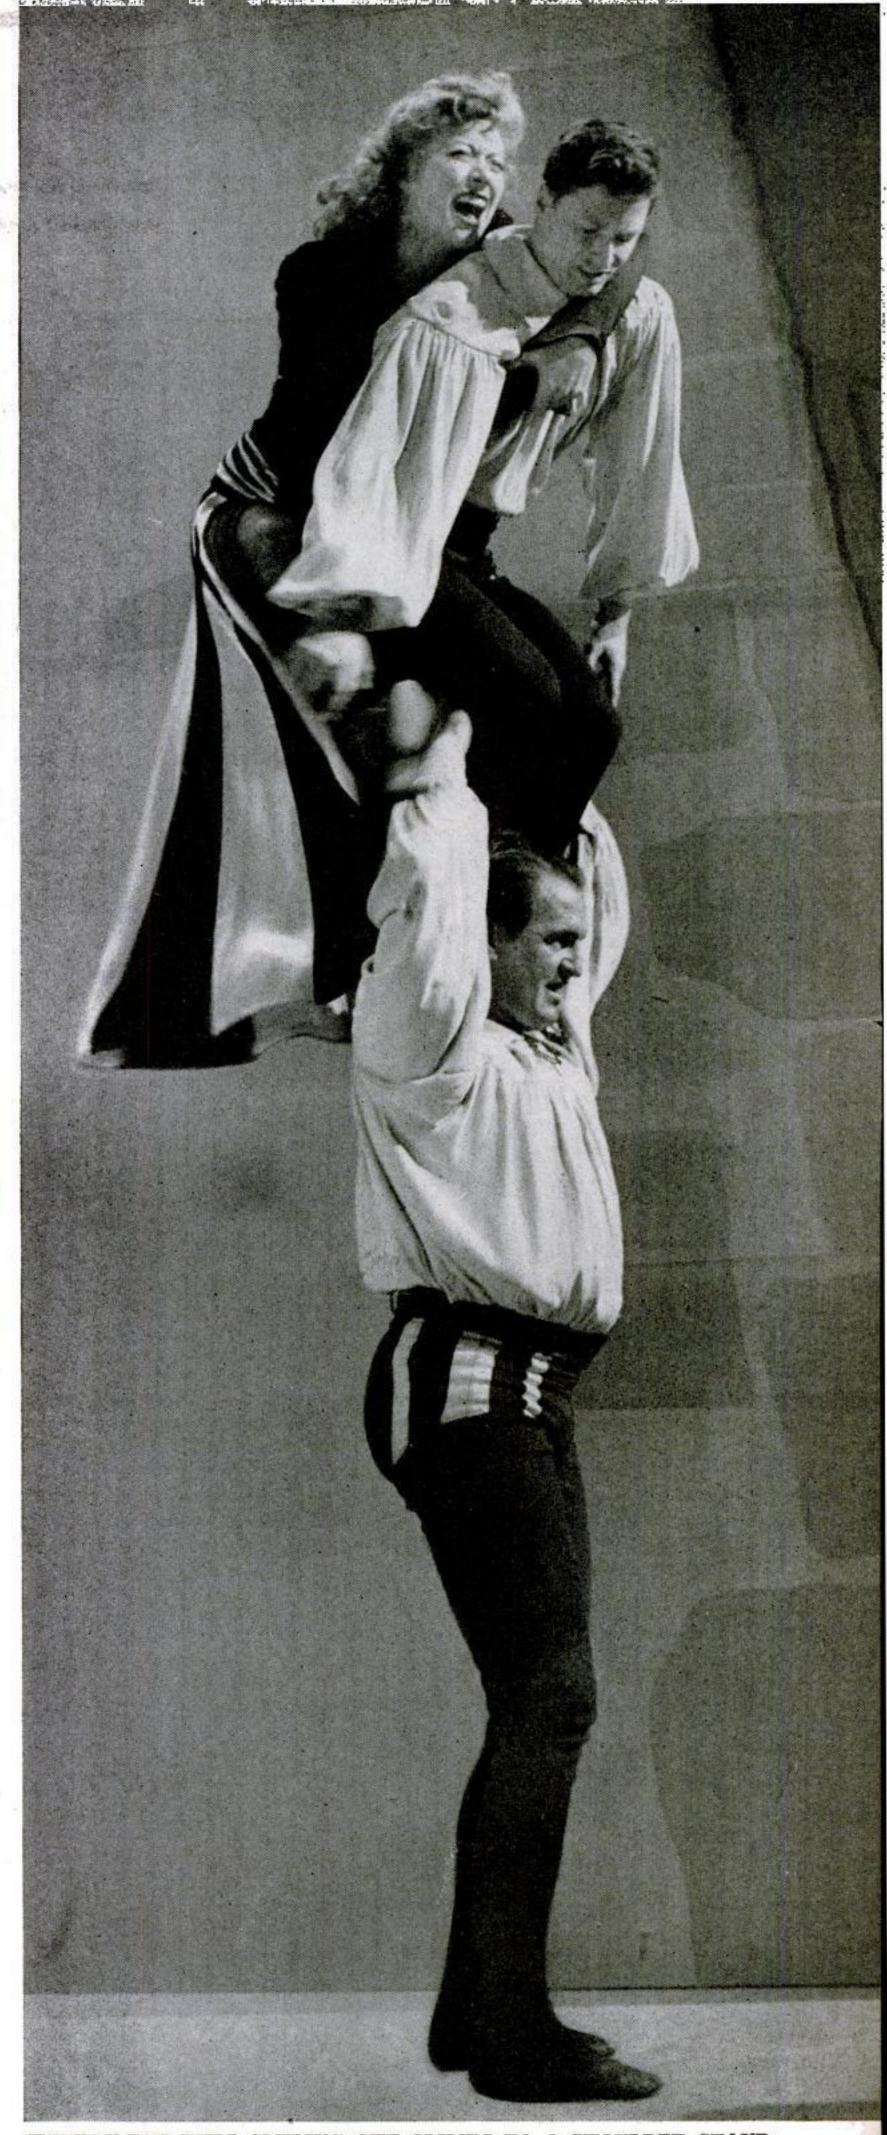

SPEAKING OF PICTURES...

. . . HERE IS GREER GARSON AS AN ACROBAT IN TIGHTS

These pictures showing Greer Garson being manhandled like a sack of meal represent a considerable departure for an actress who has made a career and a fortune out of playing noble and unhappy women. After watching her suffer everything from desertion (in Random Harvest) to bigamy (in Desire Me) Miss Garson's employers, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, recently decided that the combination of Greer and drear was wearing thin. They thought it might be a good idea for her to change her act and, for once, play something other than a woman who weeps gently in the close-ups and obviously belongs to a garden club. Consequently in a forthcoming movie called Julia Misbehaves, Miss Garson is cast as a raffish acrobat who performs high kicks and pratfalls in a manner calculated to make Mrs. Miniver drop her teacup in shock. Judging from these pages, Garson in tights should be a refreshing change from Garson in tears. To see some similar radical character changes on the part of male actors, turn the page.

"Sal Hepatica's the self-starter you need," his wife says. "Here!"

9 A. M. Here's Bill behind the wheel and sparking on all cylinders. As usual, Sal Hepatica, the sparkling saline laxative, brought quick, gentle relief. Taken first thing in the morning, it usually acts within an hour. It also aids in counteracting excess gastric acidity and helps sweeten a sour stomach. Keep a bottle of Sal Hepatica handy! Don't risk feeling miserable all day waiting until bedtime to take a slow-acting laxative.

In a national survey, more than half the doctors recommended Sal Hepatica. Why not try speedy Sal Hepatica next time you need a laxative?

Ask your doctor why Sal Hepatica works so fast. He knows that because Sal Hepatica is a fluid bulk laxative, soft pressure is exerted to stimulate gentle, speedy action.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

TRIAL BY JURY

Sirs:

Your article on the jury system (Trial by Jury, Life, May 17) convinced me more than ever of the limitations of justice by the people. At one time justice was administered by the valid standard of the background and personal appearance of the accused. I protest the wanton imprisonment of Clifton Bowers, whose honest face and gentlemanly dress attest his innocence.

UNION NOW

Sirs:

It was kind of you to say in your editorial (Life, May 10) that our arguments in favor of the U.S.'s forming a Federal Union of the Atlantic Democracies "bring it ever closer to the edge of realism." But you went far beyond any claims I have ever made when you called it a "panacea." That means, by my dictionary, "a universal remedy." One of the points that most distinguishes us from the United World Federalists and others is that we have always opposed, as impractical, the idea that America's free federal principles can be applied between nations universally now.

Nor have we Federal Unionists ever presented our policy as a cure for all the ills that afflict humanity. We say it is the best way to freedom, peace and prosperity. But even in these respects, we do not claim that it is foolproof or easy....

Since I wrote Union Now we have suffered a second world war as the result of following policies that were deemed easier and more practical than the proposal for federal union which I made in my book. Since then we Americans have been trying to secure freedom and peace in still other ways that we thought would be easier—only to see another dictatorship spread and bring a third war ever nearer.

I feel sure you will concede that our arguments were near "the edge of realism" even back in 1939 when I said on page 1 of Union Now that "its difficulties are greatest at the start; other ways that seem easier and more obvious to begin with grow increasingly hard and lead to frustration."

LIFE'S COVER

The sphinxlike girl on this week's cover is 16-yearold Helen Sinclaire. She arrived in New York from Texas three weeks ago, intent on finding a modeling career. She did. In fact she had more calls for modeling than she could handle and has already made $1,000. Last week she flew home to graduate from San Antonio's Alamo Heights High School. As soon as possible she will return to New York where she hopes to earn enough to go to college and study art. Here she wears one of this year's new T-shirts (by Shepherd). She wears another on page 104.

DEFYING THE REDS, a Finnish woman boldly sings her national anthem while her timid escort hides his face from camera. Scene took place in the railroad station at Helsinki when the Finnish delegates departed to negotiate treaty of alliance with Russia. Communists showed up to cheer and sing the Internationale but were outsung.

THE FINNS RESIST THEY DISRUPT A COMMUNIST OFFENSIVE BUT THE REAL STRUGGLE LIES AHEAD

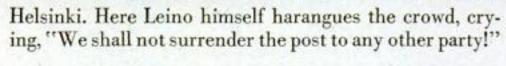

Orphaned on Russia's northern doorstep, the stubborn and independent people of Finland last week made a surprising and heartening—although perhaps futile—stand against a concentrated Communist power drive. The Red offensive began on May 24 with a series of nationwide strikes and demonstrations, ostensibly in protest against the dismissal of Yrjö Leino, the Communist chief of the vital Ministry of the Interior.

Recognizing that the Communists were trying to create enough chaos to wreck the government and bring the Reds to power, patriotic Finns boldly risked Communist vengeance to express their bitter opposition. To the amazement of the West—where political and military strategists have already written off Finland as hopelessly lost—the government remained secure. Even though the Finns were forced to take another Communist—Leino's wife—into their cabinet, they had scored a definite victory. A Helsinki newsman commented, "The Communists tried out their machinery and found it wasn't oiled. But they'll try again."

The next serious test may come in the fortnight just before the July 1 national election, the first since 1945. The prospect of defeat in the election may move the Reds to renew their power drive, using techniques which have proved fruitful in other countries (pp. 36, 37). They have five cabinet ministers and control of 25% of the Finnish electorate—enough to create an artificial crisis if the bosses in the Kremlin so decree. But the Finns have served notice that they will not walk, but will have to be dragged, behind the Iron Curtain.

COMMUNIST PROTEST, following dismissal of Yrjö Leino from his cabinet position, packs workers' district in PRESIDENTJUHO PAASIKIVI is Finland's most respected figure. Red press long hesitated to criticize him because of his great prestige but last week began to attack him following his dismissal of Communist Minister Leino.

YRJÖ LEINO speaks from the rostrum beside one of the piles of cordwood fuel which line Helsinki's streets. Finnish liberals wanted him ousted as minister of interior to forestall Communist control of police during elections.

THE FINNISH PARLIAMENT holds a somber session during the recent crisis over a Russo-Finnish treaty of LEINO'S WIFE, Hertta Kuusinen, is Finland's most prominent Communist. When her husband was forced out of the cabinet she was taken in as minister without portfolio. The Reds now hold 5 out of 13 cabinet posts.

salliance, which most Finns feared might be a short-cut to subjugation. The magnificent statuary which adorns the capitol, done by Finland's famed Sculptor Wäivö Aaltonen, reflects the Finns' forthright love and respect for the human figure and serves, for members of the parliament, as a constant reminder of the dignity of the individual.

REPARATIONS FOR RUSSIA—carloads of electric cable—are checked off in Helinki before being shipped to the U.S.S.R. To satisfy Russia's exorbitant war claims, he Finns have already ceded important parts of their territory, including the Karelian sthmus, and now are compelled to strip their economy of all but the basic necessities.

HUMOR IN ADVERSITY is displayed by the Finns, who have a wry joke about this 1,000 Finnmark note (worth $7.69 at legal rate) which bears a reproduction of a classic Finnish painting. Finns explain that the naked figures staring into the distance symbolize the Finnish population watching the last shipment of reparations leave for Russia.

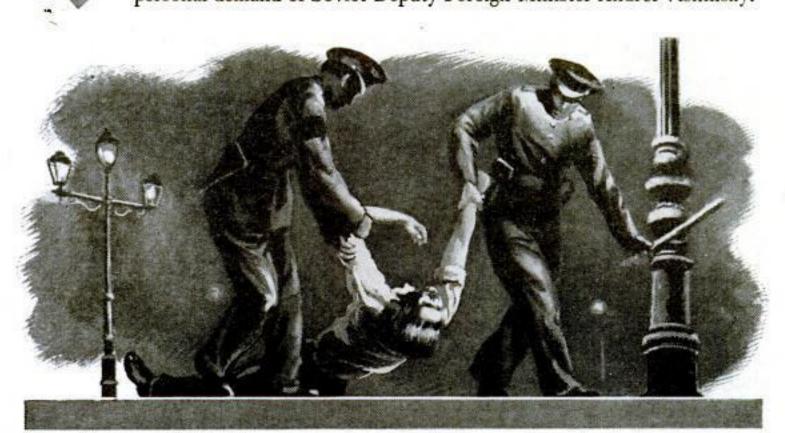

THE ROAD TO COMMUNIST POWER IS TRAVELED BY MANY DIFFERENT GROUPS, EACH FALLING IN LINE BENEATH THE RED CATCH PHRASE WHICH APPEALS TO IT MOST.

IN AN ELECTION disciplined Communists vote as a solid bloc while the opposition is divided among various democratic parties. Anti-Communists may be further weakened at polls by Red intimidation and there are times when the count can be rigged.

MINISTRY OF INTERIOR is the first goal of the Reds in a coalition government. This gives them control of the police force, with which they can smash the opposition through arrests and beatings. In Romania, Communist Teohari Georgescu became minister of the interior at the personal demand of Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Andrei Vishinsky.

THE REDS HAVE A STANDARD PLAN

When the Communists set out to seize power in whatever nation is next on their timetable, their methods follow a standard pattern. The first step, taking advantage of economic unrest, consists in stirring up the people with a relentless drumfire of propaganda slogans (above). These catch phrases are skillfully designed to appeal to the traditional interests of varied population groups. The next step occurs when the Reds have gained sufficient strength to enter into a coalition government. Once this is accomplished, the Communist drive to power rapidly moves into high gear. One by one the key ministries of government are taken over (below) until at last they are in a position to seize total control.

This technique has worked almost to perfection in the so-called "hungry" countries along Russia's frontier or now drawn behind the Iron Curtain. Poland, Romania, Bulgaria and Hungary were ripe for Communist conquest, MINISTRY OF JUSTICE is another key spot sought by the Communists in their drive to power. By dominating the courts they can imprison or execute their enemies almost at will while providing legal immunity for their friends. In Bulgaria the Communists trumped up charges when they jailed (and later killed) Nikola Petkov and several hundred of his followers.

FARMERS ARE ATTRACTED BY THE IDEA OF MORE LAND, INDUSTRIAL WORKERS BY THE HOPE OF MORE MONEY AND HOODLUMS BY THE PROSPECT OF STRONG-ARM RULE

partly because they had no ancient traditions of democracy. Yugoslavia was torn by dissension and Czechoslovakia was softened up by a large and militant Communist minority. But in the democracies of Western Europe the Reds have encountered much stiffer resistance. They have failed in France and Italy because the peoples have had a chance to show their preference for Western democracy over a police state.

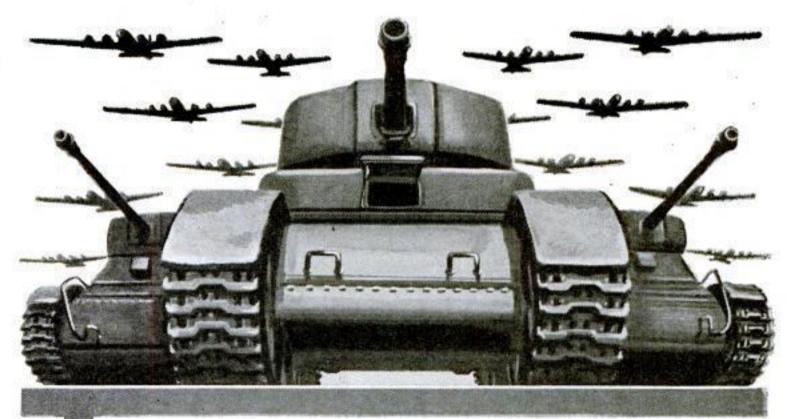

In Finland the Red power drive also faces resistance. It is true that the Communists remain in the cabinet after a preliminary showdown and retain working control of the Ministry of the Interior. But their legitimate prospects in the July 1 election are not bright. If the standard technique of the "inside job" fails, it will remain for Moscow to decide whether to interfere openly in Finnish affairs or play a waiting game in which the vast forces of geography and military potential could bring Finland at last to her knees.

COALITION GOVERNMENT may have only one Red surrounded by Socialists, Agrarians and Christian Democrats, but the lone Communist can disrupt the government by shrewd maneuvering, stubbornness and threats, preparing the way for a collapse.

MINISTRY OF INFORMATION, when taken over by the Communists, soon becomes a full-blown Red propaganda agency, suppressing all native anti-Red publications and censoring incoming and outgoing news. In Poland, Communist propaganda has an undisputed field while reports of world affairs are stifled or altered to conform to the party line.

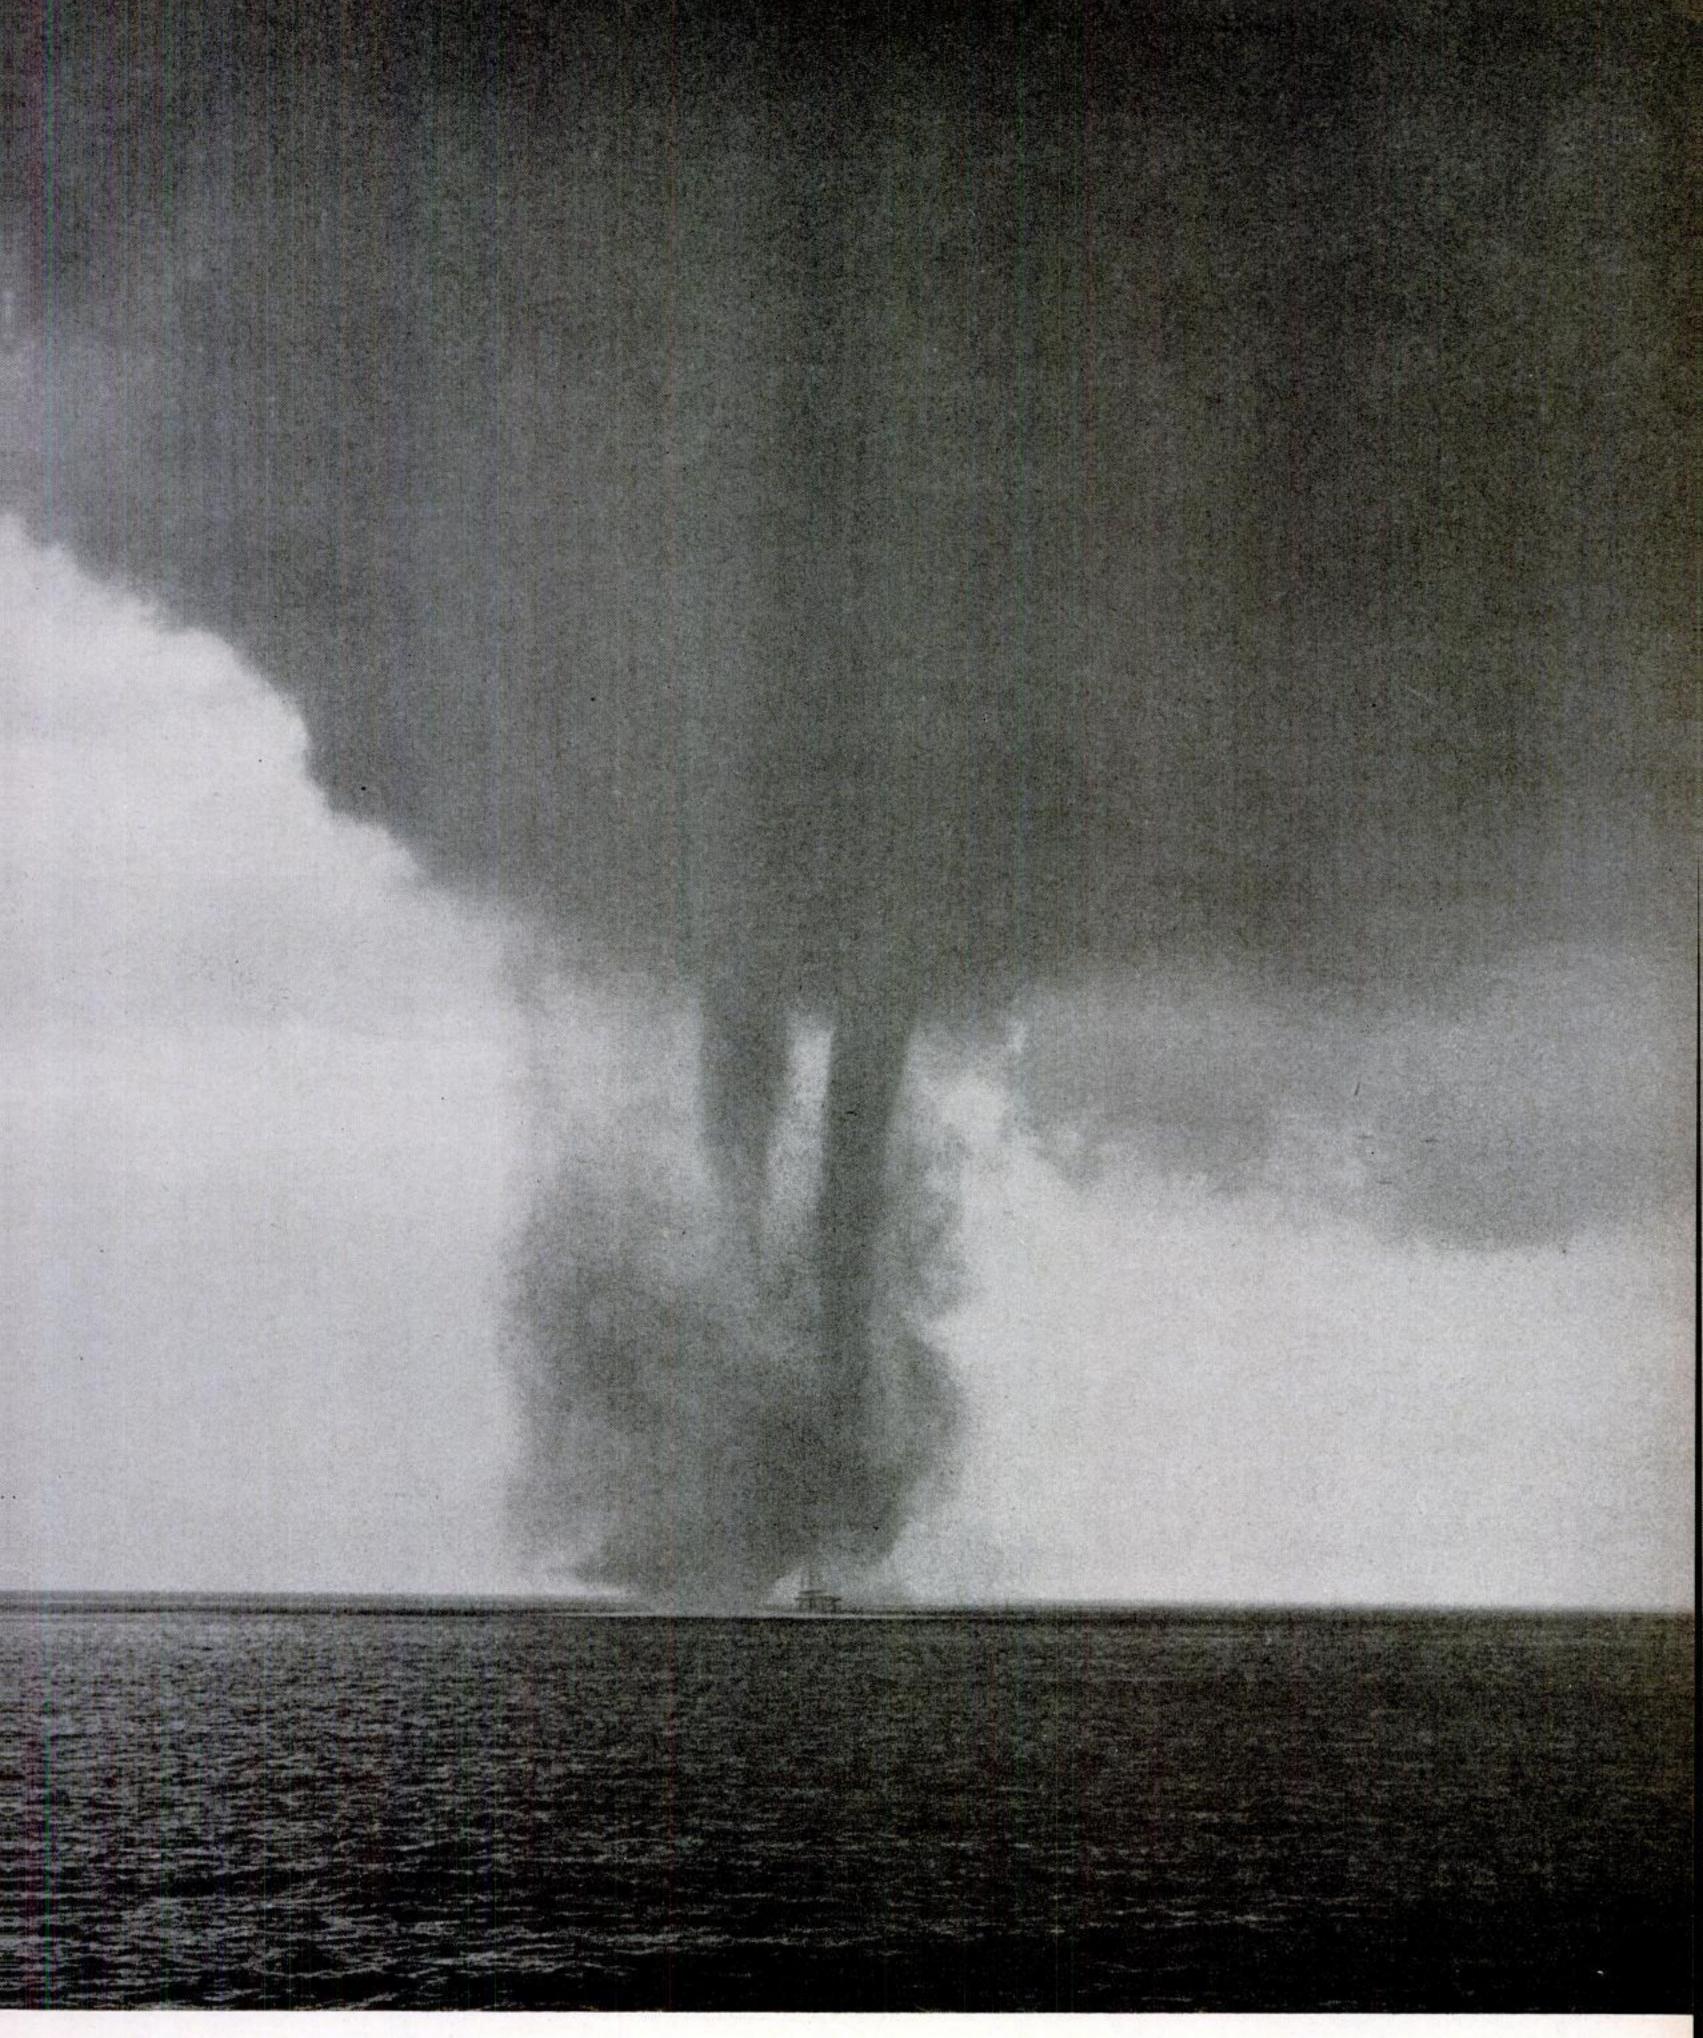

MINISTRY OF WAR is the final cabinet post required by the Reds to effect complete domination of the country. Troops can easily smash any opposition not crushed by police and close borders against outside aid. In Yugoslavia, Red soldiers maintain heavy frontier patrols which periodically flex their muscles in the direction of Americans stationed in Trieste.

WATERSPOUTS EVERYWHERE

Waterspouts are columns of raindrops, usually 20 to 30 feet thick, suspended in the air by the swirling vortex of a tornado. Alone they are not an uncommon sight. Only very rarely are two of them seen close together. This remarkable photograph of three of them in action at the same time is a meteorological event. At the right, two of the waterspouts have narrowly missed an oil-drilling platform a few miles off the Louisiana coast in the Gulf of Mexico and are kicking up huge clouds of spray. On the left, the third waterspout has just formed and begun to stir up the sea. These waterspouts, among 17 reported in the vicinity that day, all formed within a period of about 10 minutes, spent themselves quickly and disappeared without inflicting any damage. But they provided an industrial photographer named Mel Coston, who was making a tour of the oil-drilling platforms, with one of the rarest meteorological pictures ever taken.

SENATOR CAPEHART TAKES A LONG, HARD LOOK AT PHOTOGRAPHS WHICH OFFENDED HIM

SENATOR ON WARPATH

Indiana's Senator Homer Capehart (left), a large and explosive man who dearly loves a good verbal brawl, has had the time of his life the last two weeks. First the senator, prowling through the Library of Congress, found the photographs below, which had been taken at government expense. Pondering the photographs and the titles filed with them, the senator felt his blood'pressure rise to exactly the high and giddy point where he likes to have it. When he discovered that the pictures were part of a collection of 150,000, taken by the Farm Security Administration at a cost of $750,000, the pressure reading went even higher—and Capehart went storming on to the floor of the Senate to brandish the photographs and demand an explanation. He declared that the pictures were "silly," "ridiculous" and "foolish." He demanded an investigation of what in heaven's name the FSA had in mind, if anything, when it shot up all those rolls of perfectly good film.

Capehart's sense of deep outrage and the nature of the exhibits he passed around provided a merry half hour in the Senate, but it was unlikely that anything much would come of the incident. In addition to the turkeys which Capehart found, the FSA photographers produced some excellent documentary work, especially of the victims of the farm depression of the '30s, and some attractive scenic shots like the one at right which were found useful in propaganda work abroad during the war. There was some question whether the government money achieved anything that would not have been done anyway by

CAPEHART'S HORRIBLE EXAMPLES OF GOVERNMENT CAMERA WORK

"TENANT FARMER reading newspaper to which he subscribes" is official caption of this Farm Security Administration photograph which is now in the Library of Congress.

"SPANISH MUSKRAT TRAPPER lying on his camp bed after too much whiskey and red wine" is title of this one. It was taken by FSA in Louisiana in 1941.

"GIRL SHOWING BOY her graduation ring." Said Capehart in great amazement, "This picture simply shows two hands. That is all. It makes absolutely no sense whatever."

"THREE WOMEN, probably government clerks, waiting for a bus on a fall afternoon." After studying it Capehart announced, "It shows the backs of three ladies."

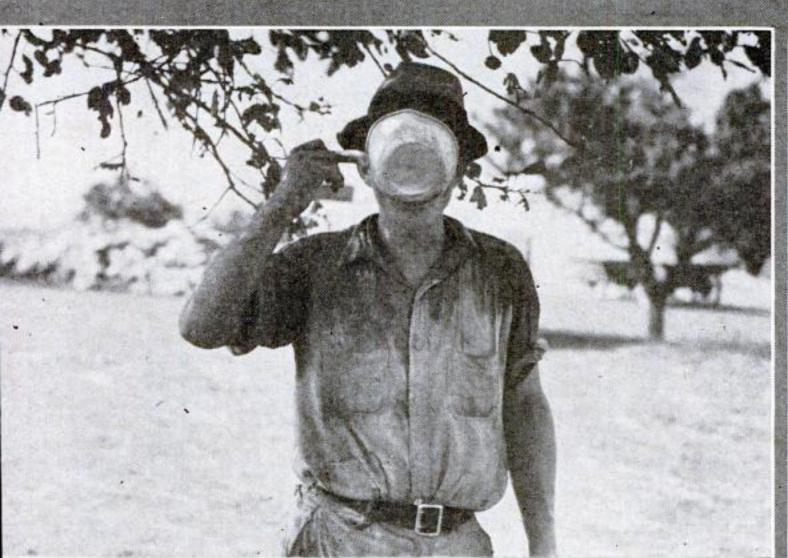

INDIANA'S CAPEHART TURNS UP SOME PICTURES AND BROADCASTS THAT MAKE HIS BLOOD BOIL

private photographers—but it was a little late to be making the inquiry. A few days later, however, Senator Capehart latched onto something really big. After prying into the broadcasts recently made to South America by the State Department's "Voice of America," Capehart went back to the Senate floor to read translations of some of the Spanish-language scripts he had found: "Colorado is one of the richest states in the union, but it is only now, after the war, that it has started its progress on a large scale because most of the capital is in the hands of the daughters, granddaughters or great-granddaughters of the miners. And of course the ladies are conservative and they don't wish to let go of what they have. . . . Pennsylvania's Quakers were and continue to be a social problem.... New England was founded by hypocrisy and Texas by sin. . . . Utah, that's where men have as many wives as they can support. . . . Nevada doesn't seem like the West, but like a Siberian steppe. . . . In Wyoming the important thing isn't the people, but the cattle."

This time the Senate was really aroused; Republicans and Democrats alike shouted comments like "drivel," "slander" and "false-hood." The National Broadcasting Company, which had been hired by the State Department to prepare the broadcasts, announced it had dismissed the programs' writer and wistfully hoped the whole thing would blow over. But the Senate, its group blood pressure now a match for Capehart's, ordered a full-dress investigation to learn who was responsible.

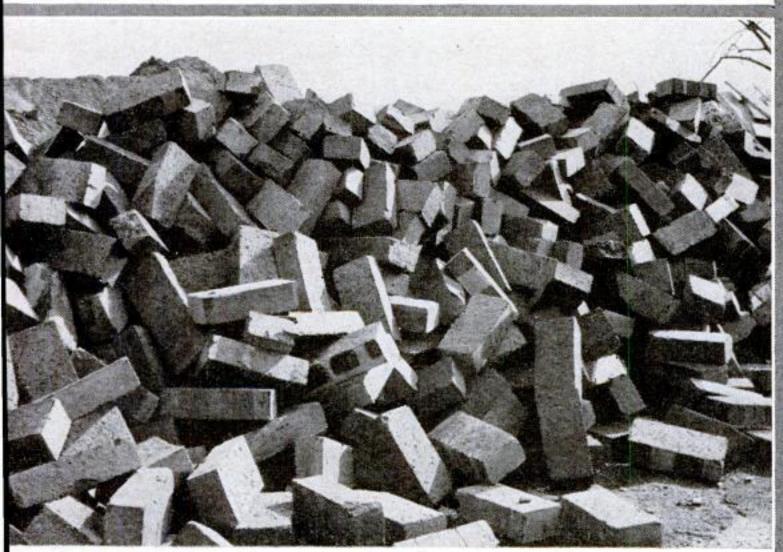

NEW ENGLAND CHURCH IN SNOW IS SAMPLE OF BETTER FSA WORK. IT WAS USED ABROAD

"THRESHING HAND taking a drink" was taken in Maryland. Capehart had no chance to comment because Maryland's Senator Tydings cried, "The best in the lot."

"A MEMBER of the audience at a Catholic evidence guild rally in Logan Circle, Washington." Capehart, questioning this title, complained sadly, "It shows but one person."

"CONSTRUCTION of war emergency buildings on the Washington Mall near 16th and 17th Streets NW. Pile of bricks." Capehart was too outraged for comment.

"A SIGN" is two-word title of this photograph taken in Louisiana. Said Capehart, "It is nothing more than one of the tens of thousands of Coca-Cola signs in America."

Within four days after the British mandate had ended in Palestine, and just when it seemed that the forces of Haganah were winning command of Jerusalem, the highly trained troops of King Abdullah Ibn Hussein's Arab Legion swarmed down from the Mount of Olives and into the city. With them during the battle was LIFE Photographer John Phillips, who took these pictures.

From the time the Arab Legion launched its attack the Old City was a blackened, twisted nightmare for both Jew and Arab. By day shells whistled into the encircled Jewish quarter, which 400 Jews were defending. By night, under the hazy light of a full moon, red tracer bullets arched across the sky. Occasionally a woman's scream cut through the clatter of gunfire or the high, keening outcries of the defenders sounded above the attackers' artillery. In the intermittent silences the tread of someone walking down an alleyway frayed the nerves as much as the gunfire. For 11 days and nights this went on while Jews sniped at Arabs from rubble piles and subterranean passageways, and Arab artillery and dynamite squads blasted a way through. A few deserters tried to throw ropes over the wall and escape, but they were quickly picked off by the Arab marksmen. Finally there was only one way out: surrender. The Jews resignedly agreed. There was no alternative, and the beaten Jews knew it. At 9:30 a.m. on May 28 two aged rabbis clutching white flags went slowly across no man's land into the ranks of the Arab Legion. There was a hurried council and the Arabs marched into the last Jewish defenses. One by one the Jews came out of their cellars to be rushed off quickly. The women, children and old men were handed over to the Red Cross, and the men were taken to prisoner-of-war stockades.

The battle of the Old City was over. Beyond it lay the New City, bigger and more strongly defended. And elsewhere in Palestine Jewish forces were faring better than the little group in the Old City had. But the Legion was astride the only supply route from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem and it had struck a crushing blow to the morale of the new state.

Next day, 5,500 miles away, the U.N. Security Council tried once again to reach an agreement on how to bring Jew and Arab to a temporary truce at least. Once again the wavering policies of the member nations could not be reconciled and the delegates failed to accomplish anything but ask for a four-week cessation of hostilities. But since five such requests had already failed, there was little hope that this last call from Lake Success would be heeded in the Middle East.

SWAYBACK MARU A saddle-like silhouette gave the heavy cruiser Salt Lake City a derisive nickname: "Swayback Maru." But there was nothing funny about her record in World War II, in which she fought 31 valiant engagements. On May 25 a naval task force on maneuvers did what the Japanese—and Bikini atomic bombs—had failed to do. After five hours of target practice a torpedo opened a hole in the Sway-back's bow. A second torpedo was fired from a surfaced submarine. The Swayback Maru then heeled over (bottom) and plunged to an honorable grave.

by a photographer for the London Daily Mail in a tournament sponsored by his newspaper last month on the Sunningdale links. Former British Champion

Sam King, driving from tee in center background, hooked his shot. As the spectators along the fairway ducked, the ball struck one of them off to the left of this group, then caromed back, just missed the heads of the two youths crouching together at center and landed at the feet of the man with umbrella at right.

But on this occasion, on behalf of a safety campaign by the Syracuse Fire Department, he was playing the part of "Fiery Felix," a dangerous and dastardly rogue who went arsonously about the city setting fires wherever hazards existed. Dashing about in a big convertible, he tossed matches onto unprotected awnings and into trash cans, let his lighted cigaret fall into waste baskets and in general made a thorough nuisance of himself. Fortunately none of his mischief ever came to anything because he was always followed by firemen with extinguishers who put out his blazes as soon as he started them. Moreover he did a fine job of warning housewives about such hazards as bad wiring and careless use of inflammable cleaning fluids. After his career was finally brought to an end by a shower of foam from firemen's pumps (right), the fire department congratulated itself on its most dramatic safety campaign ever.

THE EDUCATED MAN

TAUGHT BY THE "INTEGRATING PHILOSOPHER," HE IS OVERCOMING HIS CHRONIC "SPECIALITIS"

This week and for a trickle of bright June days thereafter there will be more college diplomas handed out than ever before in any single year of U.S. history. Some 250,000 seniors, including many beneficiaries of the GI Bill of Rights, will listen to speeches proclaiming them educated men and women-and the U.S. adult population will be richer by 120,000 new bachelors of the liberal arts and the sciences, 25,000 engineers, 30,000 new teachers with normalschool training, and 75,000 people who have learned everything from pharmacy to horsedoctoring, from technical schools, correspondence schools and other institutions. Quantitatively speaking this means that an American faith that is as old as the first Yankee schoolmarm is being gratified as never before. But how many of the 250,000 new diploma owners are truly educated men? And what shape has our ancient ideal of the educated man come to assume, anyway?

The skeptics are still with us. On the eve of the greatest turnout of U.S. college graduates ever seen Chancellor Robert M. Hutchins of the University of Chicago told an international gathering at Frankfurt am Main that American education is nothing to imitate. Our schooling, said Dr. Hutchins, is "chaotic," the emphasis on "specialization" something horrible to behold. Professor Harold Laski, the errant intellectual of Britain's Labor party, laments the "intense belief" of the American student in "the folly of superfluous effort and in the short cut by which that effort can be saved." As for the ideal of the educated man, it has become a babel of clashing ideals. The followers of John Dewey, who believe in "learning by doing," fight vociferous battles with Dr. Hutchins and the other partisans of the 100 Great Books; advocates of vocational training battle the few who want to return to compulsory Latin and Greek; President Truman wants colleges for practically everybody while Father Gannon of Fordham says this would suffocate our educators with "tides of mediocrity." In between the extremes there are a hundred compromises, combinations and permutations; U.S. education is rich in experiment if in nothing else.

Our Educated Ancestor

A hundred years ago the problem of recognizing the educated man was simple. He was a person who knew Greek and Latin and mathematics and enough of a special discipline to be either a good clergyman or lawyer. He had studied moral philosophy-the "capstone" college courseunder President James McCosh of Princeton or Noah Porter of Yale and so presumably knew something about what that favorite educated man of the lyceums, the Rev. Ralph Waldo Emerson, liked to call the "conduct of life." Having been exposed to the Greek and Roman classics, the educated man of 100 years ago was supposed to know something about the forces that had governed the rise and fall of two ancient humanist civilizations. He did not have to read Arnold Toynbee to brush up on ways and means of saving society from perdition.

Our educated ancestor, if he had truly absorbed his education, was not usually a cynic. Having studied moral philosophy, he was supposed to have an acquaintance with the virtues of courage, justice, magnanimity, charity and truth. His whole training was supposed to give him a power of generalization that would enable him to thread his way through any body of evidence or any proposed modes of alternative behavior that might confront him.

Those who look back with nostalgia at the old education cherish the notion that it gave a man both depth and breadth. Certainly the revolutionary generation of Jefferson and Madison, the men who fought King George III over a moral issue and later wrote the Constitution, gained the power of generalized thinking from their studies. But the descendants of Madison and Jefferson did not know what to do with their ancestors' tools. The modern age is supposed to suffer uniquely from the disease complained of by Dr. Hutchins, the disease of "specialitis." But the old classic education had its own form of specialitis; the student of Latin frequently spent so much time on his case endings, his gerunds and his conjugations that he had little energy left to cultivate any understanding of what the Latin authors were saying. And the student of moral philosophy, taught by clergymen with a vested interest in one specific type of truth, was sometimes led to suppress the uncomfortable evidence that was leading to a clamor for the institution of new courses in biology, in psychology, in the social sciences.

The New Lopsidedness

To incorporate the new sciences, to give a new breadth and a new depth to the ideal of the educated man, the generation of Harvard's famed Dr. Charles Eliot fostered the free-elective system. The mature student who happened to choose well from among a variety of riches could absorb more education under this system than from the narrow curriculum of the preceding generation. But the Eliot dispensation led to new lopsidedness, to specialitis in one field or to superficiality in many. A man who knew everything about genes or atoms frequently knew nothing about the claims of good citizenship; a dilettante in the arts often had little acquaintance with the virtues of courage, justice, magnanimity, charity and truth. People who went in for the scientific studies that specialized in amassing facts seldom emerged from them to master the power to generalize or to argue from principles. If the old ideal of the educated man had often resulted in a narrow concept of values, the new ideal often led to a slippery moral relativism or to a denial of all values whatsoever.

Writing in the '90s about the failure of the Japanese to get at the inner secret of Western education, Lafcadio Hearn said, "Self-restraint of the Northern [i.e., the Western] sort requires large-mindedness. It is rendered possible only by large, straight, powerful apprehensions of general truth, and the general effects of general causes. The ability to think in relations, and in abstract relations, alone accounts for the existence of England." But even as the Japanese were failing to become really Westernized in their thinking, the West itself was becoming Japanized.

So the problem in recent years has been the same one that bothered the educators of the pre-Civil War period: how to add breadth to depth, how to produce a college graduate who would combine general intelligence—Lafcadio Hearn's "large-mindedness"—with enough specific knowledge to earn his living in a given field. Ever since the early 1920s the growth of "integration courses," of "orientation courses," of "directed studies," has shown that educators are aware of the problem of creating the truly educated man. The Harvard report, General Education in a Free Society, was the culmination, not the beginning, of a movement. Precept has been followed by practice: Yale, for example, has a course in philosophy, the specific purpose of which is to "integrate and illuminate the work of the other four courses." The result of this course, which is limited to a picked number of freshmen and sophomores, has been to raise the student's average by several points. Other universities have made similar approaches to the problem.

· ATT 5.76

But the world, at least in the more cosmopolitan universities, is too much with the student. Says Dean William C. DeVane of Yale College, "As many as 25 lecturers from the outside world have come through here in a single week. Every national cause and movement has its campus club, its speakers, its sponsors. The campus an ivory tower? Would that it were; we need a touch of the ivory tower. As a matter of fact, the present beats with such persistence upon the student that he doesn't have a chance for contemplation. One function of the educated man should be to put ice packs on the fever of contemporary life. But how can you produce critics of American life when the student is overwhelmed by it?"

The question is pertinent, and Dr. Hutchins is himself an ironical commentary on it. Dr. Hutchins would have the student absorb general education from the great masterpieces. But Dr. Hutchins has spent a good part of his energy in recent months raising millions to keep some of the best nuclear physicists in the U.S. working together at his University of Chicago. If the vast accretion of new facts in the 1920s made integration and perspective a vital necessity, what must the complexities posed by Dr. Hutchins' stable of high-priced physicists do? Even as the new integration courses begin to take precarious hold they are in danger of being overwhelmed.

The Distractions Grow

The tides pushing the student toward early specialization are running stronger than ever; a chemical engineer coming straight off the campus can evidently have his pick of many jobs (pp. 111-119). The distractions beating in on the campus from the outside world must increase in intensity with every new mechanical triumph in television and whatnot. The need for generalized thinking, for large-mindedness, is far greater than it was in 1919, when Professor John Erskine of Columbia University first instituted a Wednesday-evening "honors" course in reading "the best-sellers of ancient times."

But the educators have at least recognized and defined their problem. And if most students are too busy with athletics and Henry Wallace or Harold Stassen to find time for contemplation, there are a few who are profiting by the new courses that put the integrating philosopher at the center of things. Since these will become the teachers of tomorrow, we may yet win mastery over our world.

CINDERELLA had nothing on me in spending lonely man-less evenings. My hair was dull, rebellious. But my sister Mimi knew a special way to keep her locks gleaming, soft and glossy. So she won all the beaux, including my "one and only," Mr. Handsome.

DESPERATELY, I resolved to spy out her hair secret from her hairdresser. "It's the magic of Lustre-Creme Shampoo," he said. "Lustre-Creme is not a soap, not a liquid, but an amazing new, dainty cream shampoo created by Kay Daumit, cosmetic genius, to bring out hidden hair beauty." And golly, how lovely my hair looked after that Lustre-Creme shampoo!

"KEEP IT LOVELY" . . . urged the hairdresser, "by using Lustre-Creme Shampoo at home. Lustre-Creme gives this three-way loveliness: (1) Makes hair fragrantly clean . . . free of dust and loose dandruff; (2) highlights every hair strand with a lovely glistening sheen; (3) leaves your entire head of hair soft, pliable, easy to manage. Its instant billowy lather is a rare blend of secret ingredients . . . plus gentle lanolin, akin to the natural oils in a healthy scalp."

Once...her hair was her despair, now she's a "LUSTRE-CREME" Dream Girl

NEXT DAY... I ran into my long lost Mr. Handsome. "Say!" he exclaimed, "What's happened to your hair? It looks beautiful, and changes your entire appearance." That night we dined at a swank roof garden. On the moonlit terrace he again complimented my Lustre-Creme tresses . . . expressed his marvel at their new softness and sparkle. "I always thought of you as pretty," he said, "but that new hair look makes you a Dream Girl . . . the girl I've always dreamed of finding."

A FEW WEEKS LATER . . . He slipped a sparkler on my finger . . . while he tenderly touched my sparkling hair. I don't suppose it always works this way. But Lustre-Creme Shampoo, with its blend of secret ingredients plus lanolin, did bring out my hair's beauty, did attract my man. (Now he uses Lustre-Creme to keep his hair clean and glossy.)

YOU, TOO... can have soft, glamorous Dream Girl hair with Lustre-Creme Shampoo. Lathers lavishly in hard or soft water. (No special rinse needed.) A single Lustre-Creme shampoo will amaze you with its "three-way loveliness" results. Your hair is sweetly clean; gorgeous in its sheen; soft, easy to manage; lovely to caress. Try it! Now Lustre-Creme Shampoo comes in tubes as well as in jars . . . for home and travel use, convenient for all members of the family. 4-oz. jar, $1.00. Smaller sizes in jars or tubes . . . 49¢ and 25¢. At all cosmetic counters.

In January of 1926 the daughter of Postal Telegraph Magnate Clarence Mackay married the song-writing son of Rabbi Moses Lipkin Baline. For the ceremony Ellin Mackay had to slip away and meet Irving Berlin in New York's Municipal Building. Society raised its lorgnettes, the bride's father fumed and Berlin wrote a song called Because I Love You.

By last week this old unpleasantness was a vague and slightly ludicrous memory. As the author of Always, Remember, White Christmas and more than 800 other songs, Irving Berlin long since had become a sort of national hero. Ellin never wavered from his side. When it was announced that the couple's eldest daughter, Mary Ellin (right), would soon marry the very social Dennis Sheehy Burden of New York and Newport, everybody from Lucius Beebe to the New York Daily News was highly pleased. Said the News editorially, "We think it's swell."

BERLIN'S WIFE, shown with him after their marriage, is a novelist (Land I Have Chosen).

BERLIN'S DAUGHTER, Mary Ellin, is 21 years old, brown-haired, brown-eyed and a music student at Barnard College. Her fiancé, a former Navy pilot, is attending Columbia University.

You make the music— Solovox adds extra fun!

I MAGINE THIS IS YOU. Your piano has a Solovox attached.

You select an instrumental effect... cornet, clarinet, oboe, or sax...violin, cello, French horn, or flute . . . almost as many as you can name!

Then you play a melody on the small keyboard of the Solovox with your right hand, while your left hand plays the piano accompaniment.

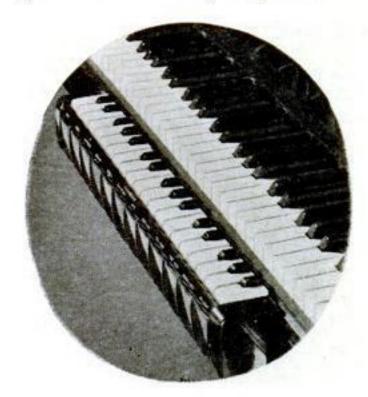

It sounds wonderful. You could go on playing for hours! It's easy, too... much more fun than playing piano alone. Two of you can team up. The Solovox is grand for duets.

Maybe you know only a few simple chords, or a few tunes by ear. Don't let that bother you. Any music you play sounds professional, because the Solovox offers such a wide variety of unusual musical effects.

You can play a single tune over a hundred different ways!

The Solovox is portable-goes on or comes off any piano quickly. Does not mar the finish, nor will it affect the normal operation. Your piano can be played separately at any time.

Don't wait another day to see and play the Solovox*. Visit your dealer's. Or, send the coupon to learn how to get more fun out of your piano!

REVENGE ON RADIO. The heavyhanded humor which characterizes most of radio's audience-participation programs last week got one such enterprise in $100,000 worth of trouble. The trouble was a lawsuit filed by Mrs. Kathie Zahn (below), a plump, civic-minded matron from Albany, Calif., across the bay from San Francisco. The program that aroused Mrs. Zahn's wrath was NBC's People Are Funny, which every Friday subjects selected victims to a half hour's buffoonery and then showers them with costly gifts.

MRS. ZAHN IN HER RED HAT

Until last Dec. 6, when Mrs. Zahn put on a red hat and took a commuter train to San Francisco to do some shopping, she had never even heard of People Are Funny. She could not know that another woman in a red hat, named "Mrs. Raleigh," was going around giving away the sponsor's Raleigh cigarets, that Mrs. Raleigh would be in a San Francisco rail terminal about noon on Dec. 6 and the person to identify her would collect a $20,000 jackpot. According to Mrs. Zahn's story, she was completely unprepared for some 2,000 fanatics who descended on her when she walked into Mission Street terminal wearing a red hat. Mrs. Zahn had to be rescued by a riot squad. She got a bill from the cleaners, some unwanted publicity (she was running for Albany's city council and subsequently lost) and, belatedly, an invitation to a People Are Funny broadcast. She accepted but soon flounced from the studio, insulted by the offers of $200 and an electric refrigerator.

On May 17 Mrs. Zahn sued NBC, San Francisco station KNBC, the Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. and everyone else in sight. Said her lawyer, "We are going to deal a death blow to all programs of this type."

"DISINFLATION"

A NOTE OF CAUTION AMID CURRENT U.S. BOOM IS SOUNDED BY A FAMOUS BRITISH ECONOMIST

GEOFFREY CROWTHER

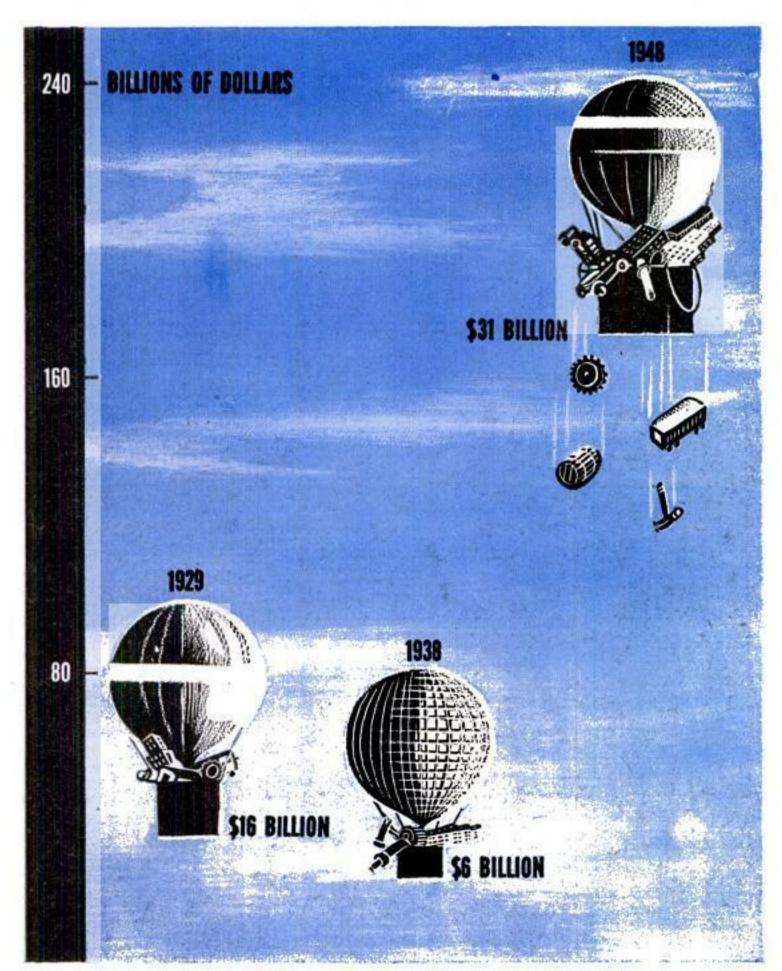

Last week business in the U.S. was booming. Employment was high. So were production and retail sales. The stock market was higher than it had been in almost two years. But was everything on the economic front hunky-dory? For an opinion Life asked one of England's most renowned economists, Geoffrey Crowther. His answer was, "No."

Crowther gives two reasons (illustrated by the drawings on this page) for his belief. First, he says, the boom has been going on too long. Every economic movement has within itself the seeds of its own reversal. Sooner or later they must sprout.

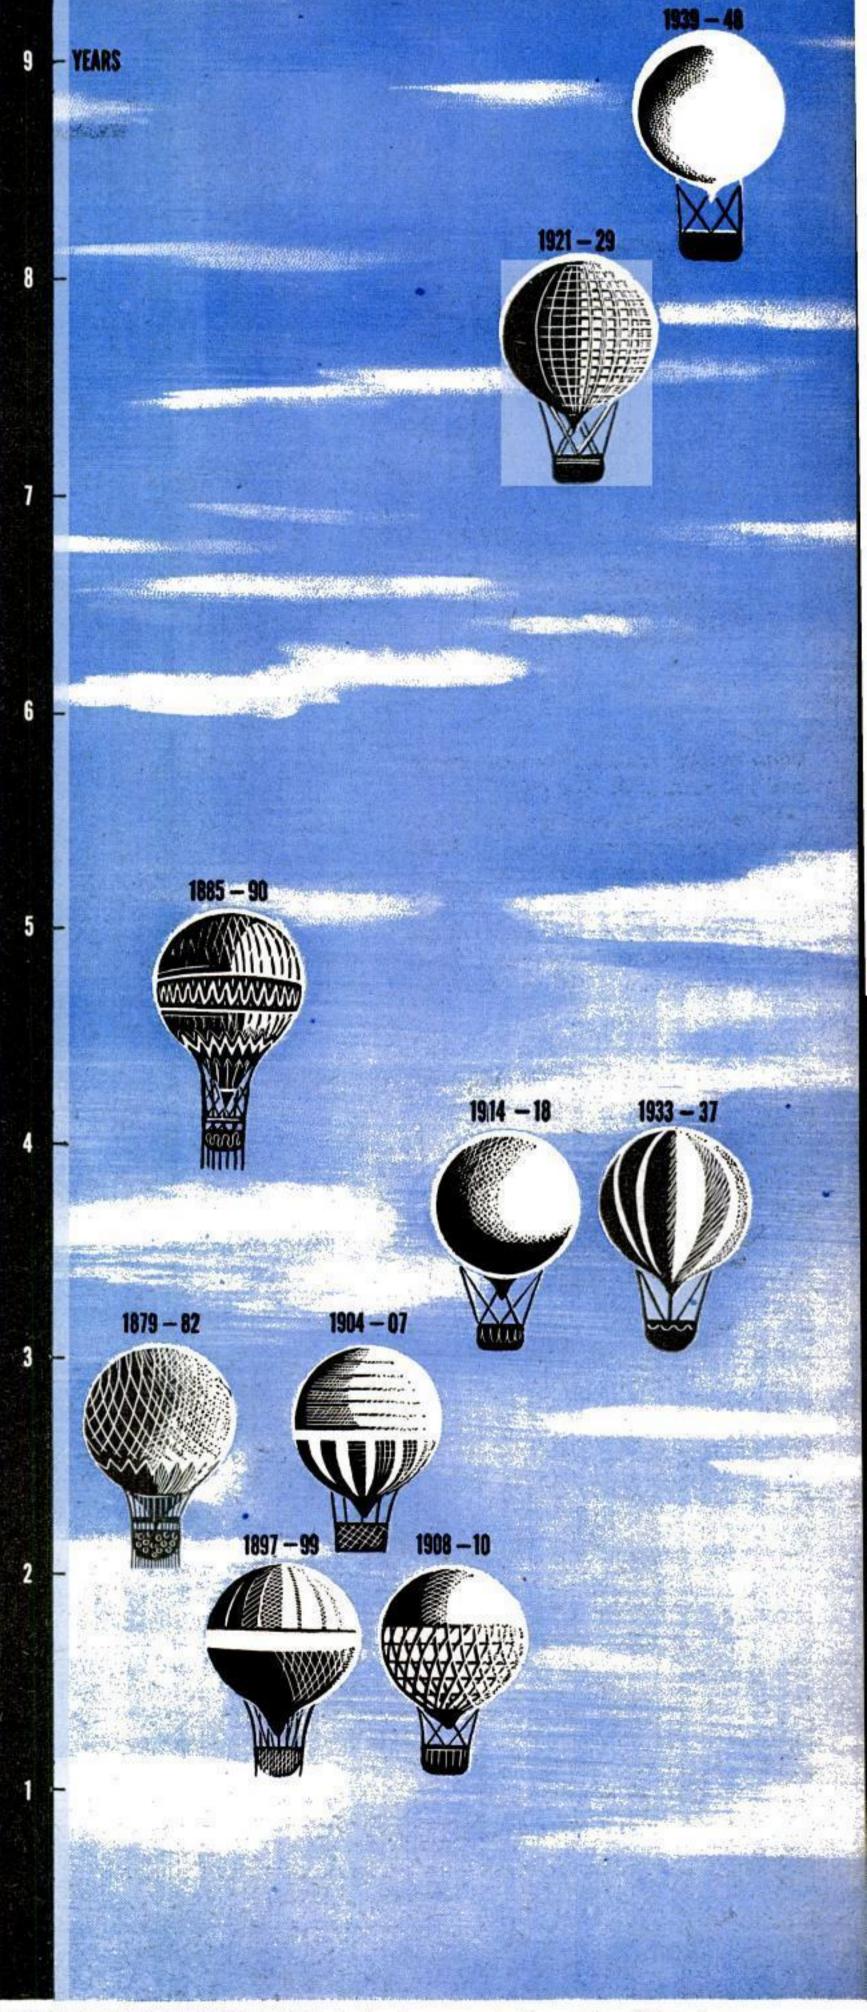

The longer they are kept from sprouting, the more violent their sprouting will be. Second, Crowther is disturbed by the enormous production of capital goods (capital formation) which now amounts to $31 billion. The market for these goods will eventually become glutted. From this it may be assumed that demand will contract, prices will decline and a recession will have begun.

The recession need not be a bad one (pp. 58, 59). Crowther has coined a word for it, "disinflation," which he says means more of a decline in prices than in wages. Companies with high-price inventories will suffer most.

Crowther's timing may turn out to be premature. He admits that he does not know when the switch from inflation to disinflation will come. Today's spiraling stock market, labor shortages, the inflationary impact of ECA and our rearmament program—all these things may conceal, even postpone a reversal. But, he feels, they cannot change the fact that it is due sooner or later.

CAPITAL FORMATION (the production of capital goods) is at too high a level. Crowther does not believe U.S. can continue to require capital goods at the rate of $31 billion a year. As a result, prices must drop or over-all activity fall from present $240 billion level. In drawing above height of balloons shows over-all business level, size of baskets shows rate of capital formation during the years 1929, 1938 and 1948.

LENGTH OF CURRENT BOOM is also dangerous, in the opinion of Crowther. During booms prices and wages rise and the productivity of labor tends to decline until goods become so expensive that they can no longer find a market. The longer the boom lasts the more aggravated this situation becomes. Crowther points out that the current boom is longest in history of the U.S. and that a correction is imminent.

HOW BAD WILL IT BE? Not bad, says Crowther, contrasting conditions in 1929 (left) with conditions today (right). In 1929 a dangerous speculative situation existed. Brokers' loans, a measure of speculative activity in the stock market, were extremely high. Banks were shaky and many were failing even before the crash started. Savings were small. Worst of all, the nation was drunk with confidence and believed we were in a "new economic era." Today brokers' loans and mortgages are much smaller and savings much bigger. The banks are in excellent shape, and the temper of the country is one of cautious apprehension rather than optimism. These factors mean that a decline in business activity will not reveal other weakness and start a real landslide. The decline should be from 10–20%, Crowther thinks, still leaving business at a fairly high level.

CAN U.S. SPEND WAY OUT? No, says Crowther, the sum will be entirely too big. With total national productivity now at $240 billion, a slump of only 10% would put the government in the position of having to spend $24 billion to keep the economy at its present level if it did not choose to let the movement run its natural course. A slump of 20% would mean pump priming to the tune of $48

billion. Only in wartime has the U.S. spent sums like these, and Crowther believes that only war or the threat of war will produce such deficits again. Actual federal deficits for eight representative years of depression and war between 1932 and 1946 are shown in balloons above. The irregular shape at right shows the fearsome but unknown deficit the government may face in 1949 if it decides to prime the pump in an effort to prevent a deflation in our economy.

"Disinflation" CONTINUED

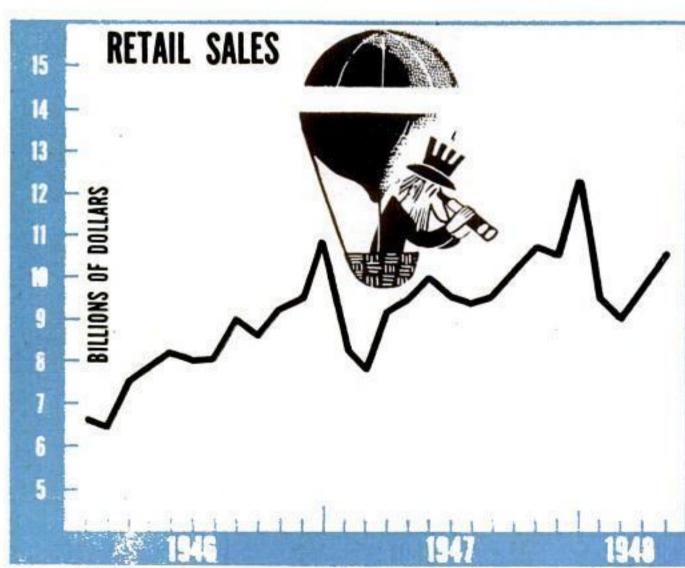

WHEN WILL DISINFLATION START?

TIP-OFF on timing of the slump can only come, says Crowther, from careful watching of business indexes. The stock market (above) has fluctuated in a narrow range for two years. A break through recent lows would be a danger signal.

COMMODITY PRICES have survived one severe recent plunge, reflecting the break in wheat and corn last winter. Another such break, coupled with a break in stocks or in retail sales, might well confirm the existence of a slump.

U.S. SALES fluctuate seasonally, with the biggest dips coming after Christmas. If curve should flatten out in next few months, it might be an indication that prices were too high. Higher prices would force sales figures further down.

It's a real economy purchase to get a whole fresh pork shoulder butt (5 to 7 pounds) and cut it at home as shown on this page.

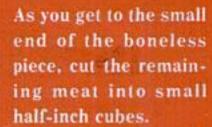

A pork butt has only one bone. It extends only part way through the piece Cut with a sharp knife, as shown in diagram, to divide easily into two pieces.

The piece with the bone is your smaller, one-meal roast.

The remaining piece is clear, solid meat. From it you can cut boneless steaks about one-half inch thick.

Braise your pork steaks just as you would pork chops. Make a panful of gravy with the drippings.

Use your diced pork for a meat-stretching dish of chop suey or, if you prefer, a casserole of corn and pork.

There is thrift in the use of meat as well as in the buying. Any cut of meat, of course, offers complete, high-quality protein—the kind children need to grow on, we all need to "go" on. But ideas like those above can help you spread nourishing meat and that good meat flavor through more meals of the week . . . appetizingly and thriftily.

IN A QUIET NORTH CAROLINA COURTHOUSE AN EX-COMMUNIST, FRED BEAL, FINALLY GETS BACK THE AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP WHICH HE LOST 19 YEARS AGO

A ONETIME RED HERO BECOMES AN AMERICAN AGAIN

The round-trip ideological journey of Fred Beal began 36 years ago in Lawrence, Mass. There, although he was only a skinny youngster of 15, he fought through the bitter textile-mill strike of 1912, applauding when the strike's radical leaders cried that the way to hasten the victory of the workers was to smash the ballot boxes. Fred Beal saw nothing strange in that, at the time. He participated in some more strikes, went to jail and joined the Communist party.

By 1929 Fred Beal had become a first-class party operator. When there was labor trouble in the textile mills of the South, the Communists sent him down to see what he could do. He moved in and called a strike at the Manville-Jenckes plant in Gastonia, N.C. and put on a big show, for a time. But on June 7, 1929 something went wrong. The local police chief was shot dead and a warrant was sent out for Beal's arrest. After two trials Beal and six others drew long prison terms. However Beal was not present when it came time to begin his sentence. He had jumped bail and gone to Russia.

In Russia Communist Beal was well received, for a time. He gave lectures, wrote articles and was given a fine job in a tractor factory. But in three years Beal was back in the U.S., a much disillusioned man. "The workers in Russia," he wrote, "were hungry and they were in rags. I never saw the equal of that misery in this country." For four years Beal dodged back and forth across the U.S., evading both the police and his erstwhile party friends, who were righteously trying to bring him to justice now that he had announced that Siberia was not a synonym for Paradise. During his fugitive years Beal managed to write an autobiography called Proletarian Journey, which irked the Reds even more. In 1938 the police—tipped off, Beal says, by a Communist—caught up with him at last. He went back to jail, served four years and then got a parole. But even then he was not a free man. He had lost his citizenship.

On May 19, however, Fred Beal finally came to the end of his roundtrip journey. He stood once more in the same Gastonia courthouse, anxiously watched the judge examine letters of reference from a dozen solid citizens including Norman Thomas, Socialist presidential candidate, and David Dubinsky of the I.L.G.W.U.
Then Beal reached out and fondly grasped the bit of paper which made him a citizen again. "Your honor," he said, "I would rather be an American prisoner than a free man in Russia."

ON TRIAL FOR MURDER in 1929 for the shooting of policeman during a textile strike, Beal maintains his innocence. He soon became a national hero for the Reds.

Citation is the top money-maker of 1948's richest racing stable

The regal dignity of the mahogany-colored colt on the opposite page is not misplaced. He is Citation, potentially the richest 3-year-old in racing history. Already he has earned a total of $423,700 to rank sixth among the all-time money winners. In 14 months of competition Citation has won 16 out of 18 starts, including the 1948 Kentucky Derby and the Preakness. If he also wins the Belmont Stakes on June 12 he will become the eighth horse to gallop off with racing's "triple crown."

Citation is the most recent big-money winner to come from fabulously successful Calumet Farm, a 1,200-acre montage of stately old trees and blue grass near Lexington, Ky. Like his older stable-mate Armed, 1947's horse of the year (Life, April 12), Citation was sired by the great Bull Lea. He is owned by Baking-Powder Millionaire Warren Wright, whose horses have won three of the last eight Kentucky Derbies (Whirlaway, Pensive and Citation), and whose stable has led all others in winnings for five of the past seven years. Last year Calumet Farm horses won a total of $1,402,436—the first time any U.S. breeding farm had gone over the $1 million mark in one year. This year they ought to do even better than that; in a single day recently they won a total of $167,170 (below).

PHOTOGRAPHIC TAILORING

New method of fitting men's clothes successfully employs solid geometry, a special camera and nine mirrors

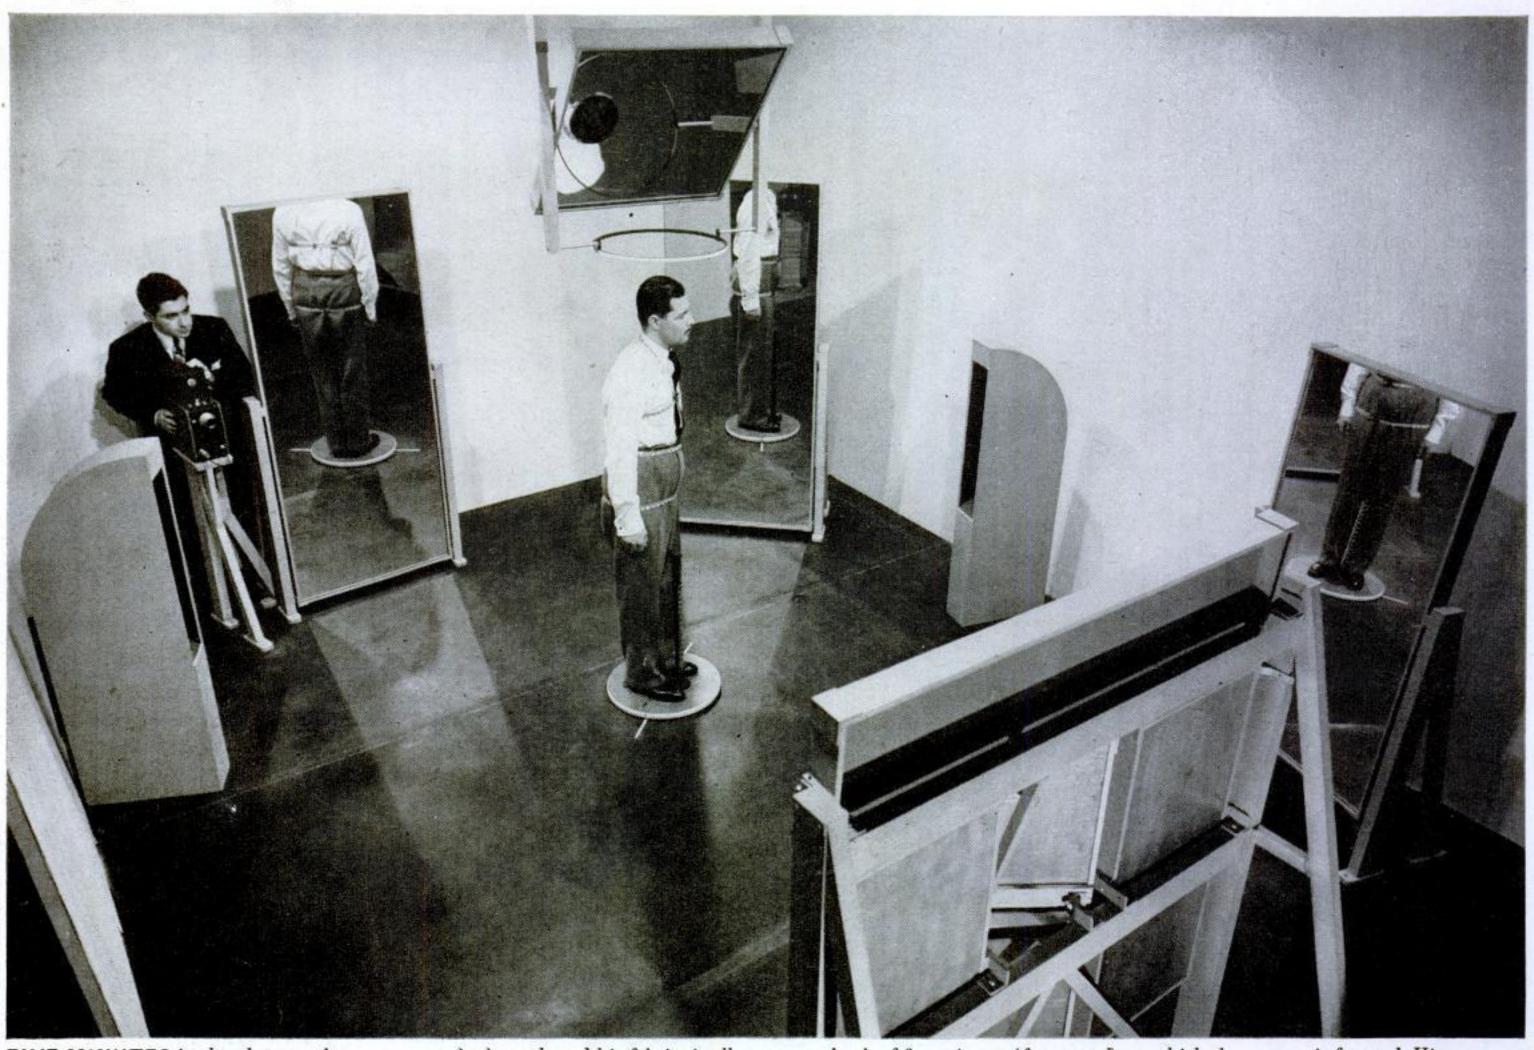

For 30,000 years man has fitted clothing to his body by visual estimate, inexact measurement and trial and error. This week a new method of tailoring which, its inventors claim, achieves scientific exactness without even a single try-on, has been announced in New York City. Called Photo-Metric, the new method employs a special camera to take carefully calculated photographs of a customer who wears a special harness of tape measures for the purpose. These pictures are then projected on a big screen in half scale (above). Various gauges on the screen plus a geometric calculator furnish the tailor not only exact figures on ordinary bodily dimensions but also such hitherto estimated measurements as the slope of a shoulder and the spatial relation of waist to chest. A suit made up from these statistics costs the purchaser $85 to $135 at present although prices will vary with the tailor using the device. It will first be leased to custom and "made-to-measure" tailors. In time it may not only reduce the cost of a custom suit but may even replace the ready-made suit of medium price since it eliminates the big inventories and alteration expenses which now burden the ready-made suit retailer.

FIVE MINUTES in the photography room, once he has selected his fabric, is all a customer spends being "measured" for a new suit. He stands on a pedestal where four widely separated mirrors, placed with scientific precision, reflect four different images to a bank of five mirrors (foreground) on which the camera is focused. His presence required no more, the customer then leaves. The film is removed from the camera and sent to the tailoring plant for projection and measurement (preceding page).

CALCULATOR digests measurements obtained from the projected photograph. The calculator is preset to the type of suit wanted (single-breasted, double-breasted, etc.), arrives by intricate computation at proper proportioning for the customer's physique.

FINISHED SUIT is delivered to the customer's home in due time without a tryon. Henry Booth, veteran textile distributor and designer who invented the new method, claims his photographically tailored suits fit better than any other kind.

THEY ARE AMONG THE NATION'S MOST BEAUTIFUL

PHOTOGRAPHS FOR LIFE BY PHILIPPE HALSMAN

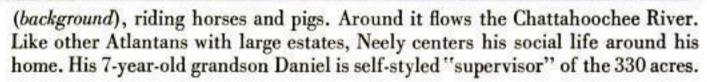

In the summer of 1864 General William Tecumseh Sherman set a torch to Atlanta, Ga. and burned it to the ground. With the flames went the Georgian mansions, the narrow streets and other trappings of the Old South which would have eventually given Atlanta the mossy splendor of a Charleston or a Savannah. In the 84 years since the war, aided by Yankee capital and a radiating net of railroads, airlines and highways, Atlanta has instead become a bustling industrial city. It has also become a city of remarkably beautiful homes.

For several good reasons Atlantans devote much of their time and money to their homes. The climate is pleasant, even in summer, and the rolling countryside is inviting. Most important, the building dollar goes further in Atlanta than in most other cities of the U.S. As a result the estates of prosperous Atlantans are something to behold. A few of them and the people who live in them are shown on these pages.

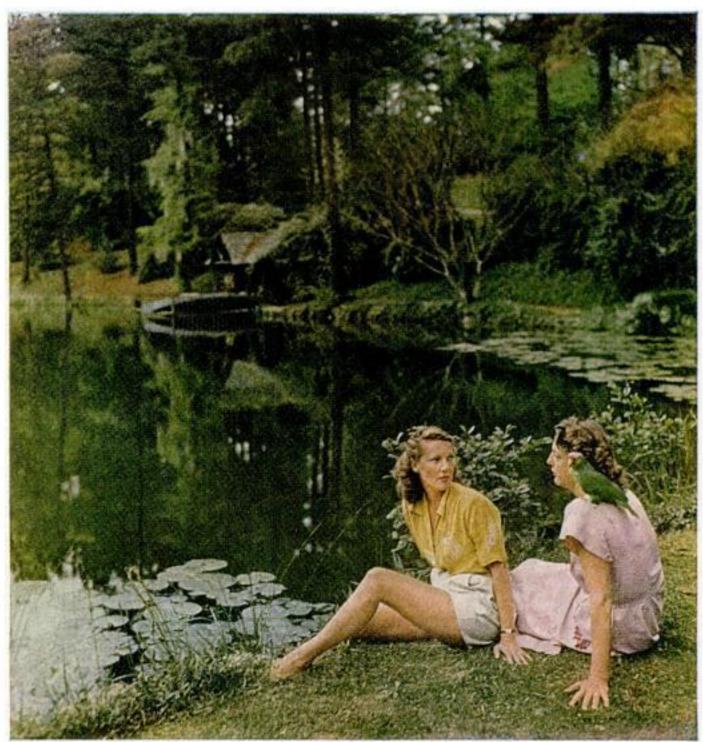

ROLLING FARMLAND surrounds home of Frank Neely (holding dog, above), who is president of Rich's, the South's largest department store. Only 22 miles from his downtown office, his farm is stocked with about 100 Guernsey cows

AN ITALIAN VILLA was the model for this formal garden of magnolias, boxwood and ivy, owned by Mrs. Andrew Calhoun. The pleasant Georgia climate makes possible the growth and the bright colors characteristic of an Italian country place.

WOOD-ENCLOSED LAKE, encrusted with lily pads, provides a rustic setting for Woodbine, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hopkins, whose daughters are shown above. Parrot on its mistress' shoulder is called Pedro, has run of estate.

ON PILLARED PORTICO of her home, Mrs. Jackson Dick (back to camera) chats with her daughter-in-law and 2-year-old granddaughter Jane. Mrs. Dick's husband is vice president of Georgia Power Company, which was founded by her father. Terrace at right leads to formal gardens lined with 40 different kinds of trees. Rolling hills and natural woods like those seen through the wire screening between the columns blend the estate area of Atlanta into one large park.

terrace for badminton and dancing dominate this California-style modern home, which departs radical-

Iy from the local pattern. The pillars support a stone awning over the pool for shade. In the background, standing behind bush, is Owner Price Gilbert Jr.

In left foreground 14-year-old Annette Torrance, a neighbor of Gilbert's, tans herself and watches fresh water spill into pool from a sea horse. Sea-horse theme is carried over into house, where the same figure is etched on drinking glasses and carved in wood to form stands for ash trays, magazine rack and coffee table.

AT NIGHT FLOODLIGHTS BRING OUT STRONG HORIZONTAL LINES OF GILBERT'S HOUSE

A Bachelor's House

IT HAS A DANCE FLOOR AND A 50-FOOT POOL

In contrast to its boisterous industrial success, Atlanta society lives quietly and leisurely. Gardening is the favorite hobby—there is even a men's garden club. Few Atlantans have summer places and few spend their weekends and vacations anywhere but in their own lush gardens and high-ceilinged rooms. There are almost no night clubs. But social life in Atlanta is not dull. Atlantans have a reputation for entertaining more than the citizens of any other U.S. city. But they do it at home. The outdoor house shown here is striking evidence of this fact. It was built for entertaining. Its bachelor owner, Price Gilbert Jr., a retired Coca-Cola executive, gives breakfast parties at 10 a.m., Coca-Cola parties at 11 a.m., afternoon teas at 4 p.m. and frequent small dinners at which he likes to barbecue steaks and make a special salad for his guests. House itself has only four rooms. But most of the space is taken up with a spacious, wall-enclosed terrace for dancing and sunbathing (left). In the evenings Gilbert's guests move inside to listen to his fine collection of records and drink long glasses of bourbon and water.

LISTENING TO RECORDS, several friends of Price Gilbert Jr. sit quietly in the living room and enjoy their host's expensive collection. Atlanta has few theaters and little organized night life because people like Gilbert prefer to remain in their fine houses the year round and have their fun at home.

Atlanta family. The house was the first of its kind designed by Neel Reid, who had great influence on Atlanta architecture. Library floor is made of terrazzo marble, and the doors, paintings, fireplace and furniture were all imported by Reid.

BOBBY JONES'S HOME has formal entrance foyer typical of the dignified style of the best Atlanta residences. The checkerboard floor is of black and white marble. Golfer Jones, who has occupied the house for nine years, is now a busy lawyer.

Elegant Interiors

THEY REFLECT A WAY OF LIFE

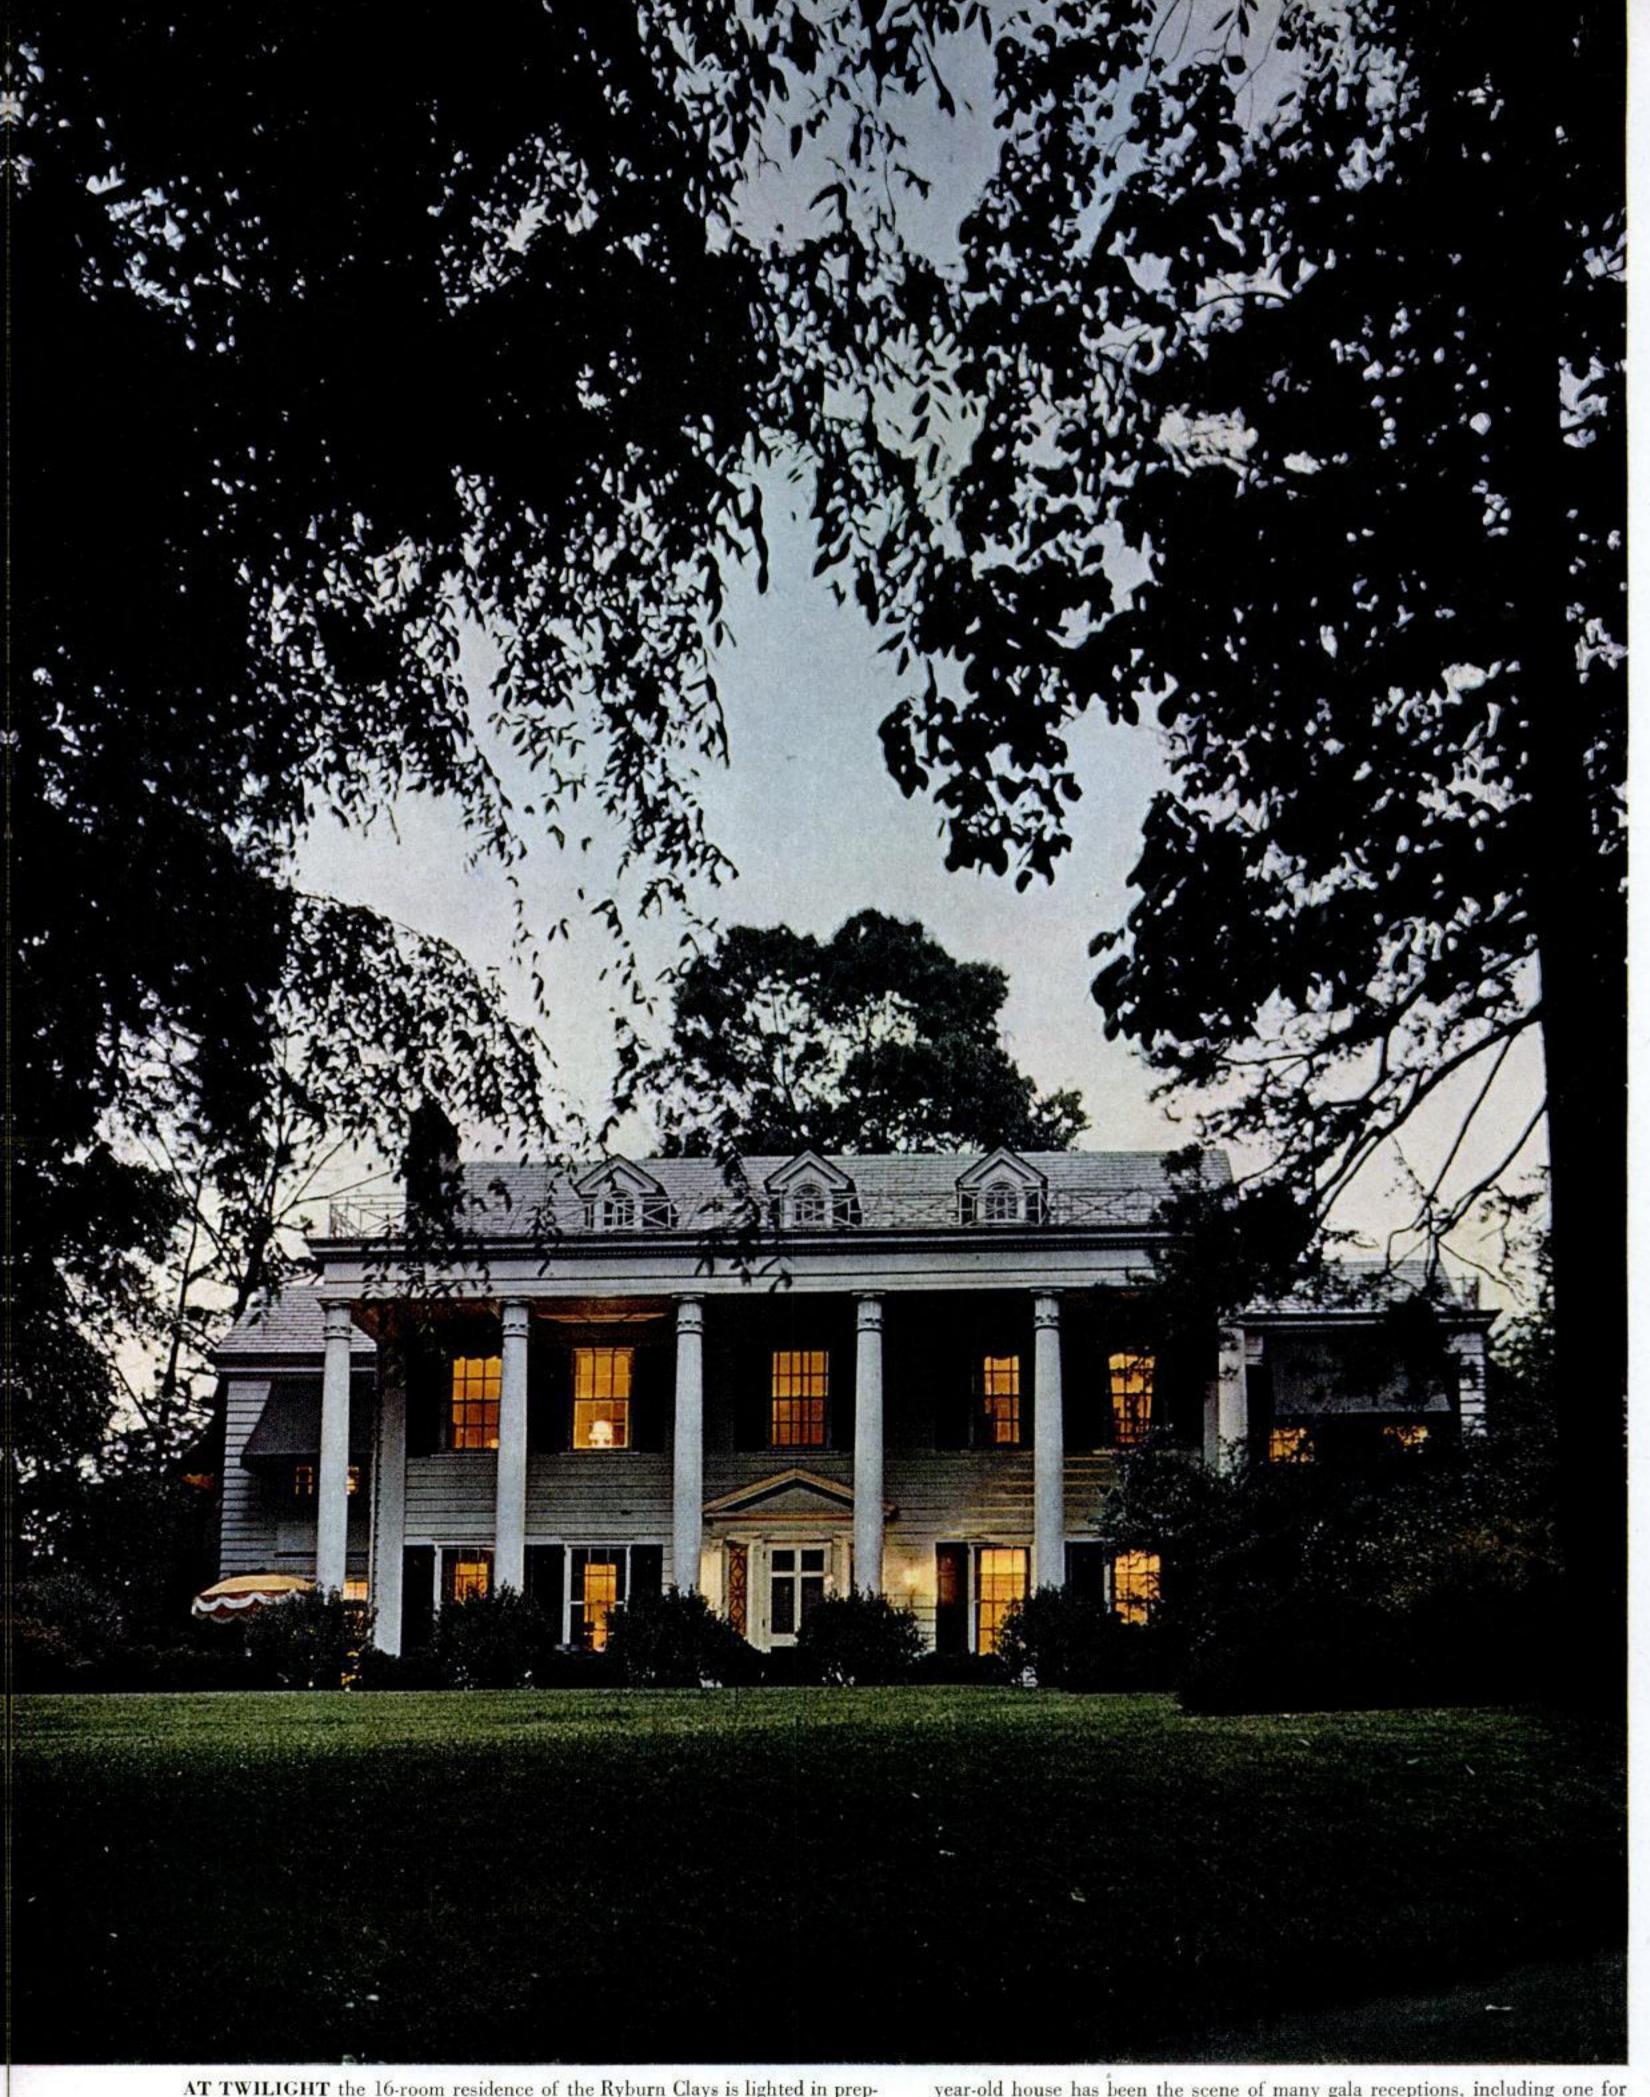

Atlantans give much of the credit for the beauty of their estates to an architect, Neel Reid, who died 22 years ago. He designed many of the hundreds of handsome North Side homes which now spread over 12 square miles of parklike woods. His houses were often of foreign design and invariably elegant, like the Italian baroque Calhoun house (above). By never building a house without also planning a lavish garden for it, Reid did much to father Atlanta's passion for gardening. Today Atlanta supports 127 active garden clubs.

Reid set a style which has been conscientiously and admiringly followed by most of the architects who came after him. It is a style admirably adapted to the way of life of wealthy Atlantans—gracious and relaxed but not somnolent. It has also tended to mold them, requiring that they maintain servants and yardmen. In this too Atlantans have been lucky. Local wages are low enough so that people of even moderate means can both find and afford the help they need to run their pleasant homes.

DOCTOR'S FAMILY, Mrs. Murdock Equen and her daughters Carol (seated) and Anne (Mrs. Wiley Perry Ballard), are shown in the Victorian living room of their comfortable hilltop home. Mrs. Equen is a former president of the Junior League, is now president of the Iris Garden Club, the local Democratic women's club and the National Pen Women's Club. Her two daughters are former presidents of the Debutante Club. Dr. Equen owns an ear, nose and throat infirmary.

AT TWILIGHT the 16-room residence of the Ryburn Clays is lighted in preparation for a small dinner party. Clay, a banker, is the elder brother of General Lucius Clay, present military governor of the U.S. zone in Germany. The 20-year-old house has been the scene of many gala receptions, including one for President and Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt. It is a good example of modified Greek-revival architecture, which Atlanta discovered and belatedly adopted in the 1930s.

During World War II the Navy was frequently embarrassed by the failure of airborne torpedoes to hit their targets. To investigate the peculiar behavior of torpedoes, the Navy has taken over a large lake in the San Gabriel mountains of Southern California and set up an underwater research laboratory. Into the waters of the lake 13-foot missiles are hurled at near supersonic speeds, producing spectacular, 100-foot geysers. From a study of these test torpedoes, the Navy's Bureau of Ordnance is extending its knowledge of hydrodynamics—the science of movement through water. many mysteries. Only when its complex mathematical problems are solved will it be possible to design torpedoes which will be more effective when fired from modern high-speed airplanes.

In addition to firing full-scale dummy torpedoes, the researchers shoot small models into a glass-sided laboratory tank in which the underwater phenomena produced by the projectile can be directly observed. In another laboratory tank small steel balls are dropped (next page) for an even more fundamental study of the flow of water around a moving object. These experiments may result in better design for peacetime seaplanes and motorboats—as well as wartime torpedoes and supersubmarines.

Godfrey CODEREY RECISTERS SEVERE NAUSEA AT COMM

GODFREY REGISTERS SEVERE NAUSEA AT COMMERCIAL HIS SPONSORS HAVE GIVEN HIM

He makes his first $200,000 a year before he is fully awake by Ernest Havemann

PEOPLE who hear Arthur Godfrey for the first time often ask, "How did that guy ever get on the radio?" The answer is about what might be expected. One Saturday in 1929, when he was a young Coast Guardsman who occasionally played the banjo and sang for his shipmates, he was spending the evening with his buddies in a Baltimore speakeasy. The radio was tuned to Station WFBR and just before midnight the loudspeaker began to emit Saturday Night Function, a program which gave Baltimore amateurs a chance to get on the air at an hour when most listeners were too tired to be resentful. After a quarter-hour of the program, another Coast Guardsman turned to Godfrey and said, "Let's go on up to the station. You can do as good as those monkeys."

Arthur

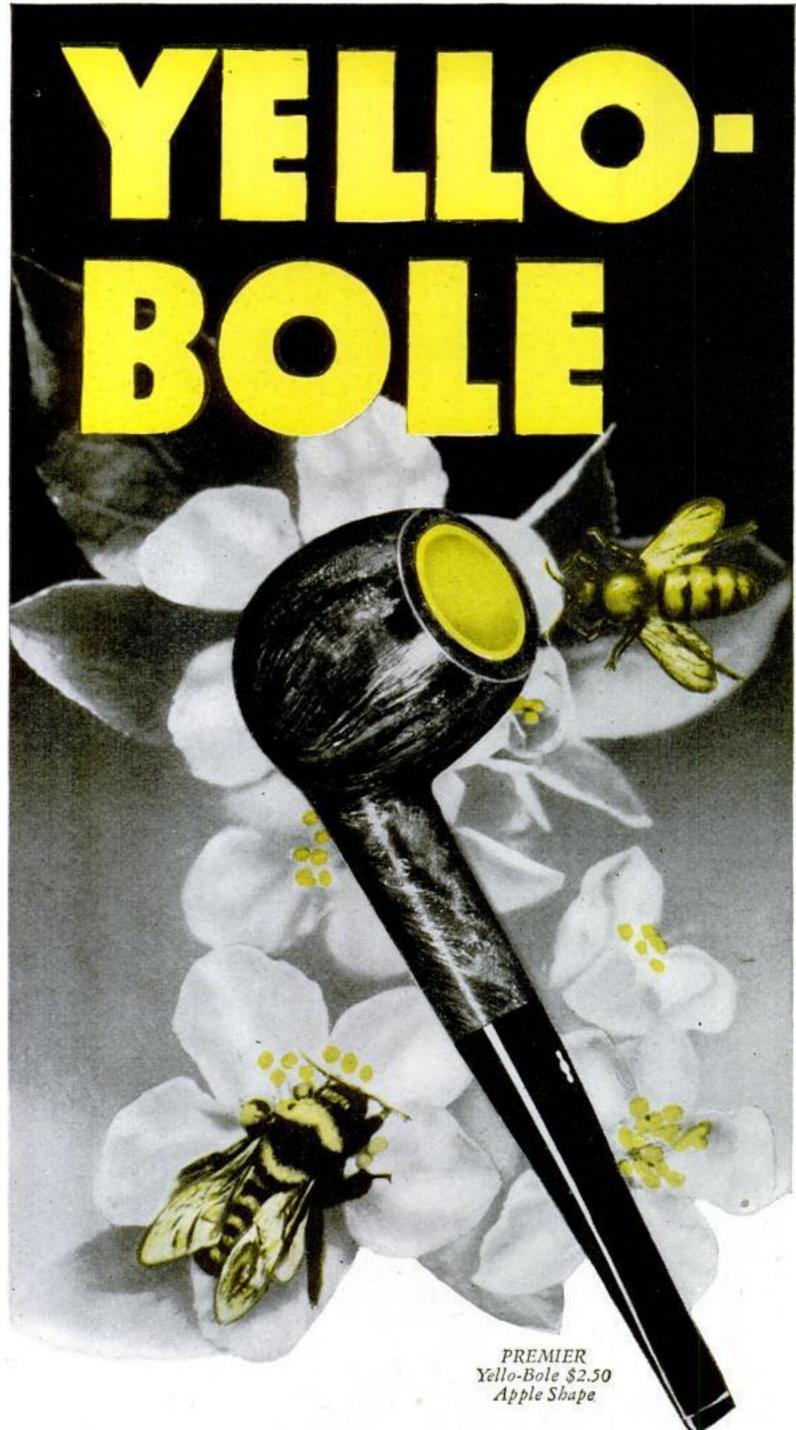

The last portion of this remark was of doubtful validity and might never have been made under soberer circumstances. But at any rate the group did invade WFBR. (In the words of Godfrey, "We had another beer and went on up. What could we lose?") Thus began one of the most amazing careers in the history of radio. Godfrey sang, plunked his banjo and was invited back by the announcer, who was having a terrible time filling up his program. After the second week Godfrey found a sponsor—the Triangle Pet Shop, which was looking for a good, cheap, $5-a-performance singer to assist in the sale of birdseed.

As a vocalist Godfrey probably would not have lasted long, even at $5 a throw. Fortunately the announcer for the Triangle Pet Shop turned up missing one night and Godfrey made his own announcements. The head of WFBR, amazed and pleased by what he had heard, immediately called in Godfrey and said, "You talk at least 50 times better than you sing. If you want a job announcing, you're on the payroll."

Godfrey has been on radio's payroll ever since, with spectacular results. As almost everybody who has ever been exposed to AM or FM knows, he is currently one of the hottest things in the business. He spends 17½ hours a week talking into a microphone, which makes him the most inescapable of all the major attractions of radio. By refusing to shut up while other entertainers are enjoying a late morning's sleep or rehearsing their next week's shows, he has built just about the biggest audience of anybody on the air. The Columbia Broadcasting System recently did some quick figuring and came up with the estimate, probably only slightly padded, that 40 million people hear him at least once a week.

In the early morning, from 6 to 7:45 o'clock, Godfrey plays records, yawns his way through low-pressure commercials and occasionally tells a shaggy-dog joke over New York City's WCBS. From 7:45 to 9:25, except for a few brief breathers, he does the same thing by long-distance wire for WTOP in Washington. For these two local shows he has 63 sponsors and a waiting list, and he has an arrangement with the stations that gives him 25% of everything the sponsors pay. He often feels sorry for himself for having to get up so early, but the financial facts of life keep him from rebelling. "There's $200,000 a year," he says, "before the average fellow even gets to the office." Once in a while, after having insomnia or playing a late benefit the night before, he does pass up the WCBS show to catch up on his sleep. This costs him $625 and is fairly expensive cat napping, but it only seems to make his listeners more eager to hear him the next day.

A little later in the day Godfrey goes on the CBS network with a half-hour show sponsored by Chesterfield cigarets. Once a week, on Monday nights, he has a 25-minute network show called Talent Scouts for Lipton's tea. This program, a sort of amateur hour for young professionals, has just jumped into third place in the Hooper ratings. In addition Godfrey makes records—one of which, the Too Fat Polka, set a record last winter by selling a million copies in less than seven weeks. Altogether his income now runs around $400,000 a year, and this may be only the beginning. There is some talk of expanding his daytime network show in the fall and adding more sponsors. Moreover he has an offer for an additional nighttime show as soon as his exclusive contract with Lipton's runs out, and he will probably be on television very shortly. There may come a day when Godfrey is on the air as often as the CBS time signal and has all the money in the world.

Two octaves are better than one

TVEN while the Godfrey phenomenon is growing to new and somewhat frightening proportions, there still remains considerable doubt as to why anybody listens to him. He took singing lessons a few years ago and increased his range to two octaves from its original one-but his voice still sounds like a shoe box full of bullfrogs complaining about a hangover. (Many listeners have a strong suspicion that Godfrey does frequently have a hangover, which is incorrect. He gave up serious drinking many years ago.) The Godfrey humor is almost as unconventional as his singing. There is no doubt that Godfrey is a very funny man, but nobody, including Godfrey, really understands why people laugh at him. He uses no formal scripts and never bothers to work out his gags in advance. He does have half a dozen writers who try to supply him with material, but most of the time he throws the jokes out or stops them in the middle-managing to get his laughs long before he comes to what comedians call the "pay-off line." One of his writers said recently, "What's the use? I write down four or five lines of boring stuff leading up to a gag line. Then I work for three hours polishing up a pay-off that's guaranteed to roll 'em in the aisles. So Godfrey reads the introduction, everybody laughs-and he throws away my pay-off line. I've been working for him two years and he never told one of my jokes yet."

Beer belongs...enjoy it

In this home-loving land of ours . . . in this America of kindliness, of friendship, of good-humored tolerance . . . perhaps no beverages are more "at home" on more occasions than good American beer and ale.

For beer is the kind of beverage Americans like. It belongs—to pleasant living, to good fellowship, to sensible moderation. And our right to enjoy it, this too belongs—to our own American heritage of personal freedom.

AMERICA'S BEVERAGE OF MODERATION

GODFREY CONTINUED

Godfrey's humor depends in large part on his speaking voice, a remarkably versatile and folksy instrument which can register extreme weariness, boredom, whimsy, surprise, innocence, innuendo and sheer delight. In part the humor derives from sponsor-kidding. Recently Godfrey heard that one of Chesterfield's advertising men was in the control room timing the commercials on his late morning show. He told his audience about this indignity and then confined his commercial to the words, "Start your watch. Chesterfield. Stop the watch." In part the humor is self-deprecation; Godfrey likes to read letters such as the one he got last month from three girls at a dental college who said they liked his program so much they would be glad to work on his teeth free if he would send them along by first-class mail. (Godfrey's comment: "I'm afraid I'd have to come with them, girls-three of 'em are mine.") Another part of the formula is some rather penetrating comment on the passing scene. "When I want to make sure spring is here," he said recently, "I don't look for robins or anything like that. I wait for the first spring chicken to ankle up Fifth Avenue wearing a brandnew black fall outfit. Then I know spring's here." As incredible as it may seem to logicians, remarks like this delivered in the Godfrey manner-fresh off the cob with all the vitamins intact-sound very good over the air.

Of all the music-and-humor shows ever sent out over a network, the Godfrey Chesterfield program is the most thoroughly unrehearsed. Much of the time Godfrey broadcasts it from a little studio in his farmhouse in Virginia, where he sits 200 miles away from his co-performers in New York—the Archie Bleyer orchestra, The Mariners Quartet and Singer Janette Davis. The studio in Virginia and the one in New York are connected by a twoway telephone line; over a set of earphones Godfrey can hear what is going on in New York and over a loudspeaker the New York performers can hear Godfrey. The telephone connection goes on a halfhour before show time, to permit a little mutual running-through of the day's business. Unfortunately Godfrey takes very little advantage of all this scientific apparatus.

What happened one day last month is an example. Immediately after his early morning shows Godfrey ate a large breakfast, went to his living room and fell sound asleep on a couch. At 10:30 a.m. E.D.T., when the people in New York began inquiring for him over the telephone hookup, he was snoring peacefully. At 10:45 a.m., after successive shakings by his wife, his sound engineer and his assistant Margaret Richardson, he began to show signs of awakening. It was now 15 minutes until air time.

At 10:52 a.m., eight minutes before air time, he rose painfully from the couch, walked to his studio and sat down before the microphone, still yawning. Spread out before him were the music and words of a song called I Went Down to Virginia, which he was supposed to sing that day but had never rehearsed with his band, and a teletype message which informed him that his song plus the work of his colleagues in New York would take up 12 minutes, leaving him 18 minutes in which he would have to talk, hum or otherwise avoid dead air. By the time he had digested this information it was 10:53.

At that point Godfrey began rehearsing his song with the band. The arrangement was rather complicated, calling for some of the band members to vocalize in harmony between blasts of the Godfrey voice, and there was some question as to which lines Godfrey would take and which lines the band would sing. Furthermore the first trial singing of the number brought out the painful fact that the ending was unsatisfactory. By the time a new ending had been worked out, and just when there was beginning to be a meeting of minds on who was going to sing what, the clock in Godfrey's studio pointed to 10:59. The telephone line went dead for the minute of studio silence that precedes the On the Air signal.

Godfrey looked up from the microphone, with the dawning awareness of a man who has been robbed in his sleep, and told Miss Richardson, "We didn't have enough time on that. I'll bet they louse me up."

"What's more important," said Miss Richardson, "is-do you have any idea what you're going to say for an opener?"

"No," Godfrey admitted. "You got anything for me?"

At that moment the band and singers in New York went into the musical introduction. Ready or not, Godfrey was on the air.

The Chesterfield show costs the sponsor approximately $6,000 a day and has a reputation and future value which are worth guarding with life, limb and in extreme cases virtue. On this particular occasion Godfrey, just eight minutes removed from a sound nap, was so ill-prepared for meeting the challenge that he had to start out by telling Bandleader Bleyer, "Let's do my song before we forget it." During the rest of the program Miss Richardson was digging frantically around the bottom of her briefcase for bits and pieces of material. She came up with three short gags, all of them, as she had predicted, terrible. Godfrey read them, improvising some vast improvements as he went along. He also managed to squeeze a few minutes of air time out of the fact that he had stayed up until 12:30 the night before, and the fact that a wren was singing outside his studio window. The show, as any steady Godfrey listener would be glad to depose under oath, was a great success.

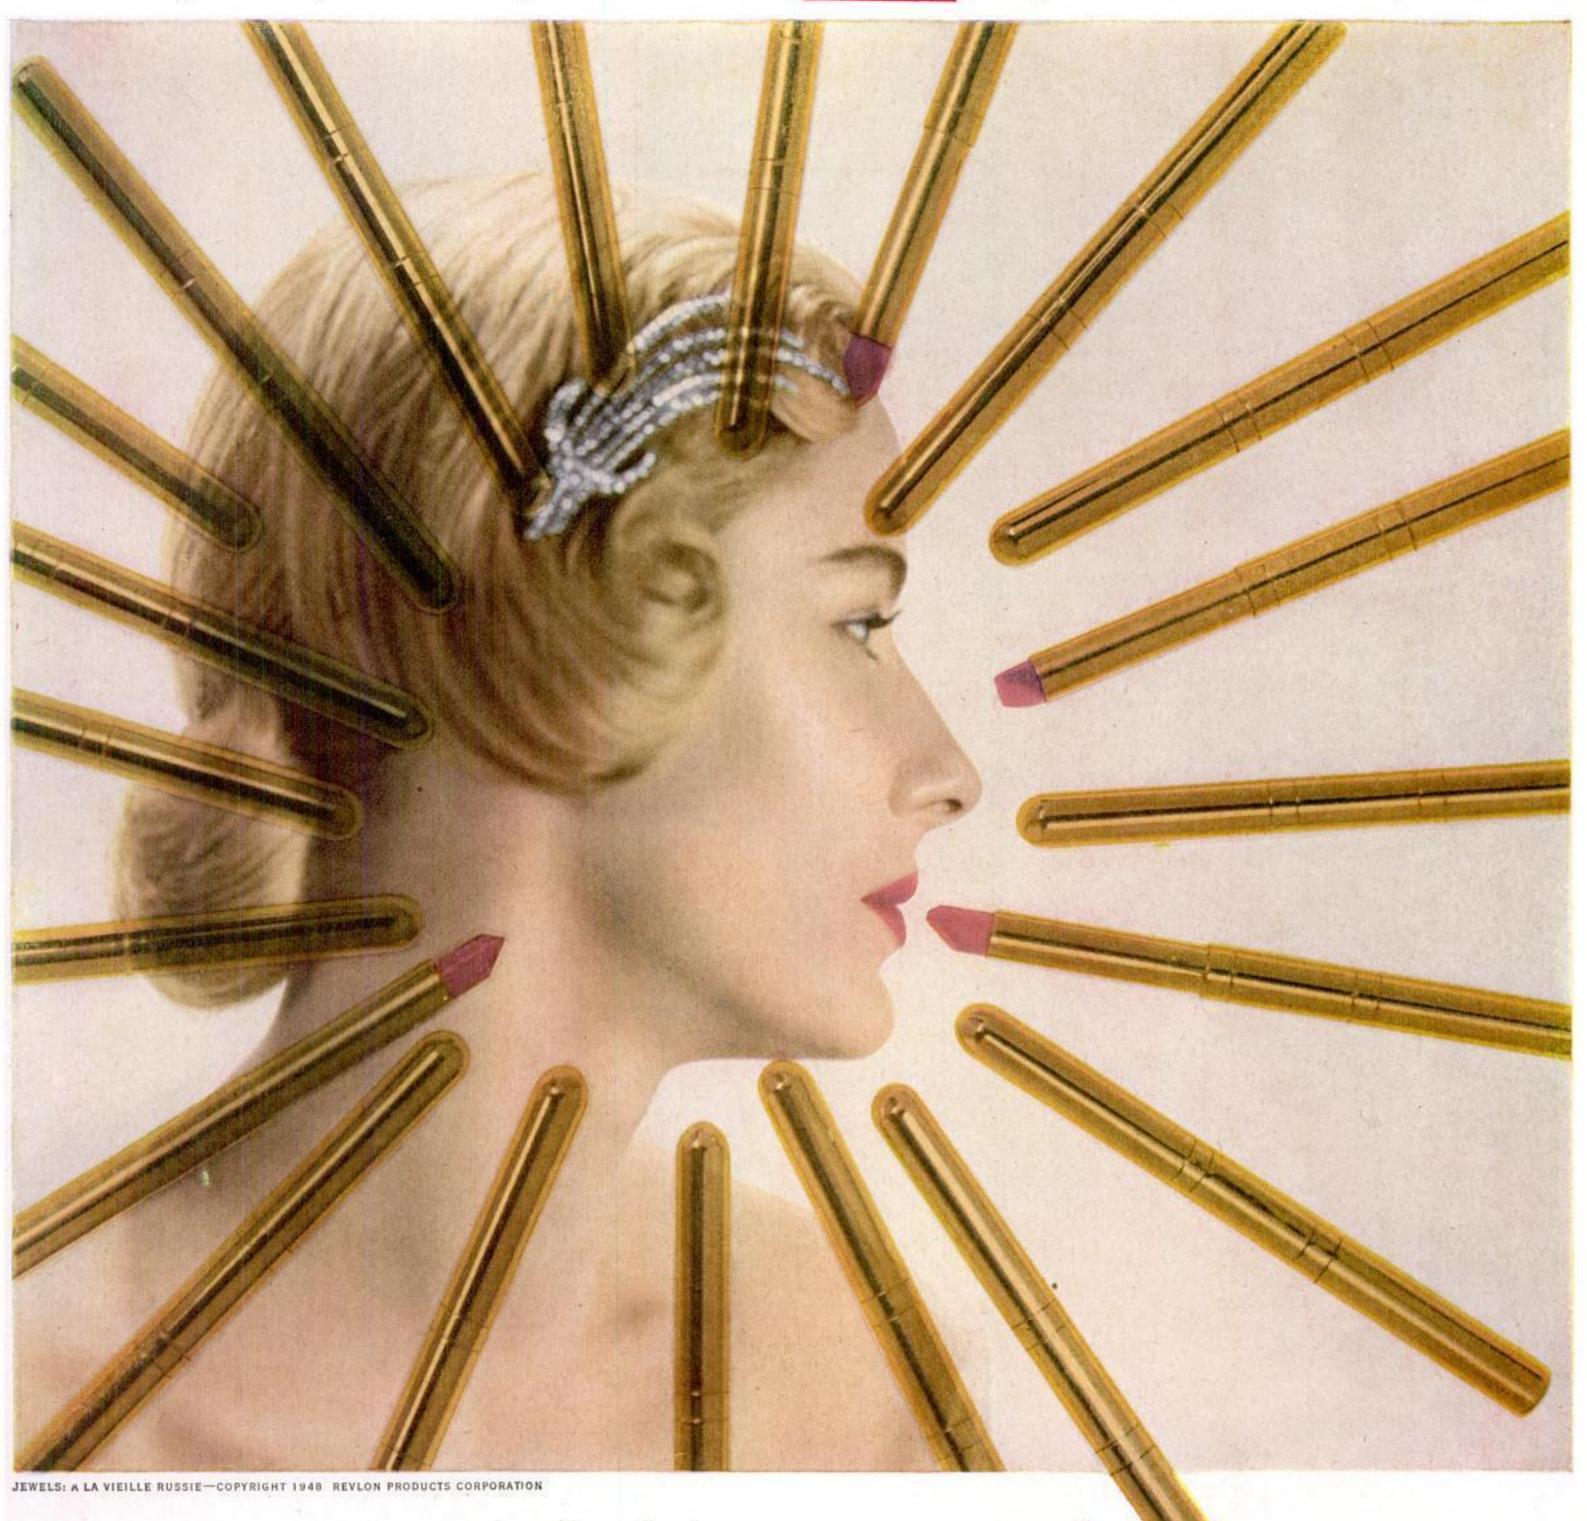

One of the secrets of Godfrey's popularity lies in the fact that although he is often late to rehearsals and never bothers to figure out his program in advance, he works extremely hard in front of the microphone. Recently a listener tackled him outside the studio and asked, "Mr. Godfrey, how is it that you can make me laugh every morning?" Godfrey, who was in an unusually philosophic mood, replied, "Honey, it's because there never yet has come a day when I wasn't afraid to death of boring you when I start talking into that mike." He talks right at his listeners, with the kind of intimacy of a next-door neighbor with a gift for telling amusing anecdotes and for shutting up if the story gets no response. Even the Godfrey singing voice, whatever its technical limitations, has its points. It is relaxed, comfortable and self-mocking. Depending on your sex, Godfrey sounds like yourself, or like your spouse, singing cheerfully and rather inadequately under the shower. The very least that can be said for it is that even if you don't like it, you don't mind it.

The only preparation Godfrey ever had for radio was growing up in Hasbrouck Heights, N.J., a fact which any competent comedian can turn into at least one good laugh a week. His father was an English gentleman who was a prolific writer on horse shows and a great authority on the hackney horse. His mother was a pianist and amateur painter. But along about 1913, when Godfrey was 10 years old, the family lost its money and, being more artistic than practical, began slowly disintegrating. When Godfrey was 15 and in his second year of high school he ran away from home and got a $10-a-week job as office boy in an architect's office in New York City.

He was a good office boy and liked the surroundings, and he might have wound up as a self-made architect had it not been for one of the peculiar accidents that have helped shape his career. On the day he collected his first pay he decided to take a boat ride to the Statue

Farming "goes Underground"

Out of petroleum molecules — drawn from deep beneath the earth — the farmer now gets more food per acre . . . new ways to increase the yield of his land.

Inside petroleum molecules, Shell scientists have already "found" D-D* to control nematodes by soil fumigation . . . weed killers . . . insect sprays . . . highly refined "carriers" of agricultural chemicals — such as hormones, which hold fruit on trees . . . Shell NH₃ to enrich the soil. Even Nitrojection, a new method of applying anhydrous ammonia directly to the soil, has been originated.

Proving ground is the Shell Agricultural Laboratory. Here, on a 142-acre farm, is centered the apparatus of petroleum research for agriculture —"tools" to study new ways to enrich the soil . . . kill pests . . . lighten farm labor.

Shell's farm was chosen for soil, water, climate — as a cross-section of conditions of the temperate and sub-tropical zones. And what the farm lacks, science creates. Indoor "test-tube" farms have their weather made-to-order . . . humidity and temperature controlled . . .

At will, Shell's scientists can work in a Louisiana cotton patch . . . a Washington apple orchard . . . or a Kansas wheat field — without even leaving the laboratory . . .

Here, new methods of soil fertilization and fumigation are checked against results and costs ... pests are grown to learn how best to kill them ... a steady flow of new chemicals from Shell's research laboratories are tested for their best possible benefits to agriculture.

End-product is what we now need most: more and better food . . .

of Liberty. As luck would have it, he walked up the stairs behind an older girl who was something of a woman of the world. High in the recesses of the statue they struck up an acquaintance. Then, on the pretext of retiring to the ladies' room, she disappeared. After waiting for her while nine boats came and went, he consoled himself by going to a hamburger stand and ordering 65 cents worth of food. When the check came he discovered that his $10 had vanished along with the girl.

In retrospect Godfrey is very fond of this incident. "I figure I am possibly the only man now alive," he says, "who was rolled in the Statue of Liberty." At the time, however, it was a tragedy. He had to work out his 65-cent check by washing dishes and, since he could not afford the luxury of waiting a week for another paycheck, he had to continue washing dishes to eat regularly. At night he slept between rolls of newsprint in the plant of the old New York Tribune, which at that time was a favorite nighttime hangout for bums around the New York City Battery.

After a year, he learned through a want ad that the Army was seeking typists for a World War I separation center in New Jersey. By lying about his age and pretending to be a high-school graduate he got a job at $105 a month, plus the privilege of living in a barrack. There he made friends with a homesick and overenthusiastic soldier from Clymer, Pa., who persuaded him that coal mining was the most profitable and pleasant occupation in the world. When the soldier got out of the Army, Godfrey went along to Pennsylvania and started working in the mines.

The world's skinniest lumberjack

At the time he weighed 130 pounds. He worked underground for a while, developed a cough and was ordered by the company doctor to get a job out in the open. For a time he was a spragger—a man who brings the coal cars under control as they come popping out of the mine. Then, disappointed with a spragger's pay, he tried to be a lumberjack. "That was an awful mistake," he concedes now. "I couldn't even lift the kind of ax they use." Finally he got a job as a farmhand, more suited to his 1919 physique, and saved enough money to carry him to Akron, Ohio.

By this time Godfrey, although just 16, was worried—as possibly he should have been—about becoming a bum. He went to an Akron police station and, in his best affectation of an Irish brogue, asked the duty sergeant for help in finding a place to live and a job. The sergeant was obliging. He permitted Godfrey to sleep in an empty cell pending further arrangements and then proceeded to find him work as a tire finisher at the Goodyear plant. By the end of two weeks Godfrey was earning a respectable wage and had found a home with a young college graduate and war veteran named Daniel Cullinane.

Young Godfrey would probably have been an exemplary citizen from that day on had it not been for a railroad strike which paralyzed the tire plant and cost him his job. He went back to work as a dishwasher by day, and at night he found a job helping run an illegal dice game over an Akron store. He thought that the dice game—in which he was the "stick man," charged with the duty of returning the cubes to the player after each throw—was fascinating. He might have stayed with the profession permanently had not Daniel Cullinane, and a Catholic priest he had met through Cullinane, persuaded him to get more education by joining the Navy.

During his hitch in the Navy, Godfrey studied so hard that he was able to pass an entrance examination for Annapolis. But instead of going to the Naval Academy he volunteered for duty as a radio operator on a destroyer patrolling the Mediterranean during the Greco-Turkish War. During duty hours he was a first-rate operator and highly thought of by his superiors, but on leave he fell into the deplorable habits which were then characteristic of sailors. "When I got ashore," he has admitted, "I always got as far as the first saloon, and there I stayed until somebody took me back to the ship. It was a hell of a way to see the world."

One evening recently, on one of the few theater excursions that his radio schedule permits, Godfrey saw the Broadway success called Mister Roberts. During one scene which shows Navy enlisted men returning to their ship after shore leave with multiple contusions and suspected fractures, he was rendered nostalgic almost to the point of tears—and he gave the play several thousand dollars worth of free advertising on his next daytime network show. His sympathy for the bruises of the sailors in Mister Roberts was genuine and personal. Godfrey's own skull, under its heavy thatch of red hair, is stitched as beautifully as the surface of a baseball, and an X-ray would undoubtedly show subcutaneous deposits of broken beer bottle and splintered table leg. In the left side of his mouth he carries a heavy bridgework to replace the bicuspids he lost to faster right hands in the Mediterranean. Godfrey was very shifty in his time, but in that league nobody could always win.

After the Navy, Godfrey had a remarkable series of ups and downs. He found a $100-a-week job in New Jersey writing advertising copy for a perfume company, quarreled with his boss, drove to Detroit and began making bodies for Ford automobiles. He got sick on this job and retreated back to the restaurant business, working his way up from dishwasher at a greasy spoon to short-order cook at the Book-Cadillac, one of Detroit's best hotels. At that point he ran into an old acquaintance from the Mediterranean, who offered him $15 a week plus a room to serve as night manager of a hotel at the opposite end of the scale from the Book-Cadillac. This hotel had an extremely doubtful clientele, and one of Godfrey's chief duties was to keep two suitcases behind the desk for the benefit of couples who seemed to have forgotten their luggage. He had no special compunction about the suitcases—but when he discovered that the hotel was headquarters for a gang of Detroit hoodlums who were seriously thinking of offering him a job as their front man, he left in a hurry. In fact he sneaked out the back door, not making a sound, in the dead of the night.

By answering a blind ad in a newspaper he found a job as a salesman—for cemetery lots. He did so well that by the end of the first month he was earning around $500 a week, had engaged a suite of rooms at the Book-Cadillac where he had so recently worked as a cook, and was driving a Stutz Bearcat. Then he tried to sell a cemetery lot to a man who owned a vaudeville troupe. The interview ended with the lot unsold—but with Godfrey, in return for every cent he had, owning a half interest and the right to perform in the vaudeville show. The troupe went on tour through the West and wound up in California flat broke. Godfrey pawned his $500 banjo for $50 and rode freight trains back to Chicago, which seemed like as good a place as any to start over.

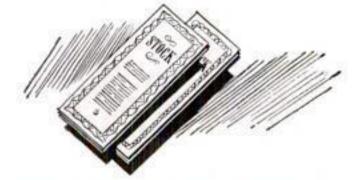

A little home in Lake Michigan

HE arrived on a cold day in November 1926. The only help-wanted ads in the newspapers read "CAB DRIVERS, must know city." Godfrey stole a 50¢ city guide from a newsstand, studied it until he knew the addresses of all the prominent buildings in the city and then applied, giving fictitious references and a fictitious address. The job lasted just long enough for Godfrey to get the hang of it. Then the manager called him in and said, "Godfrey, we've been investigating your application and we still haven't found a single one of the people you listed as references. Furthermore the home address you gave is a half-mile out in Lake Michigan. You're fired." After this blow Godfrey, coming to the conclusion that there had been only one period in his life of real security and stability, decided to get back into the service by joining the Coast Guard. He

Can you find your shoes in this picture?

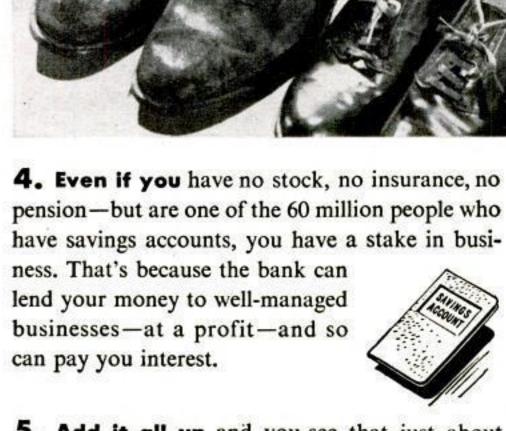

1. If you could look at the shoes worn by the people who are the true "owners" of American business, chances are you'd find your shoes among them! And that holds true whether you're a factory worker or a schoolteacher—a farmer or a store-keeper—a clerk or a cowboy—a housewife or a stenographer—or anything else! Here's why:

2. If you own a single share of stock in any business enterprise, you are one of the 14 million Americans who are direct owners of American industry, and who receive part of the profits of industry in the form of dividends.

3. If you carry life insurance, you are an indirect owner of business. Because the premiums you and 75 million other policyholders pay are reinvested by insurance companies in sound, profitable businesses. That's why your insurance policy can give you income as well as safety. The same holds true of almost all pension plans.

5. Add it all up and you see that just about every family in America today is a part "owner" of business. Which means that just about every family in America profits when industry profits.

NAL ASSOCIATION OF ANUFACTURERS

For a Better Tomorrow for Everybody

How much profit does it take to do so much good for so many people? Here, indeed, is another miracle of the American "profit system."

For, while most Americans think 10 to 15 cents out of each dollar of sales would be a fair profit for business to make—Government figures show industry averages less than half that much!

And about half of what industry does make goes right back into business to pay for the development that brings more Americans more good things than are enjoyed by any other people on earth!

taught radio classes, graduated at the top of his own class in an advanced-mathematics course and eventually was sent to Baltimore to design radio equipment. It was this last move which, by chance, found him standing in the Baltimore speakeasy the night the lightning struck.

Even after Godfrey got into radio, he might just as easily have turned into a routine announcer. He moved from WFBR to the NBC station in Washington, where he was paid $50 a week to read announcements with dignity and beauty. "I had a bit of a British accent and a broad A," he says now with great distaste. "It must have been murder." He was even being considered for a diction award in 1931—and might have won it had he not been driving down a highway when an approaching truck lost its left front wheel and careened across the road. When he awoke in the hospital he could move only his head and his right arm, and the doctors, who were surprised to see him wake up at all, told him he had 32 fractures distributed from skull to kneecaps.

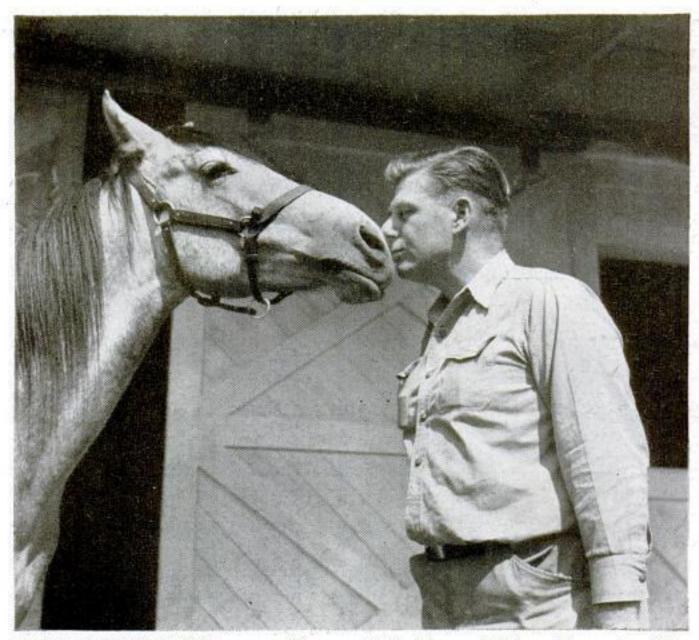

The accident kept him in the hospital for months, forced him to use a cane for several years and still makes him limp slightly, but he considers it one of the luckiest things that ever happened to him because it gave him time to study his new profession. "For months I was lying there," he says, "listening to these guys purr, 'Good evening, ladies and gentlemen'-just the way I had been doing. Finally I thought, why you --! In the first place you haven't got any audience. The only people who are giving you their undivided attention are fellows like me who can't move. If there are as many as two people in the room, they're talking. Where do you get this ladies and gentlemen stuff?"

The first time he got back to a microphone Godfrey tried a new technique. The sound engineer was sitting back waiting for the old Godfrey voice to boom out, full of all the spurious oomph that announcers like to affect. Instead Godfrey said quietly, "Good evening"-just like that. The station managers thought he was still sick and should rest for a while longer. The chief announcer put an arm around him and said sadly, "Old man, you just haven't got it any more."

They finally buried Godfrey on an early morning record program. He did as he was bid for four mornings, but on the fifth morning he stopped a record in the middle and told his audience, "Ain't this the silliest thing you ever heard of? Here I'm playing the William Tell Overture at eight minutes after 7 when everybody wants a little peace and quiet." With that he broke the record and added into the microphone, "Hey boss, if you're listening, . . . " followed by a loud Bronx cheer. "See?" he told his audience. "Those guys don't listen. If they do, I won't be here tomorrow morning."

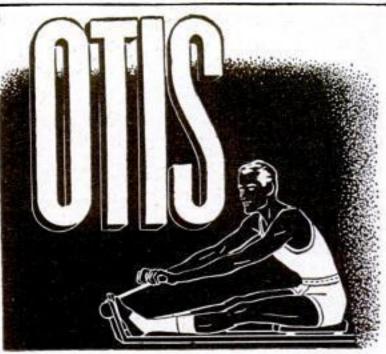

Godfrey expected, and half hoped, to be fired. Instead his boss told him one day, "Godfrey, I hear you're a scream. I'll have to get up some morning and listen to you."

People have been getting up and listening to him ever since. The best explanation seems to be that millions of Americans still like a casual and neighborly fellow who agrees that stuffed shirts are abominable—especially in the morning.

FARM FAVORITE Sunsan, a 2-year-old Arabian colt, kisses its master. The 800-acre farm also has cattle, chickens, geese. It made Godfrey $12,000 last year.

STRIPED JANTZEN T-SHIRT, BLACK SKIRT, WHITE HAT AND GLOVES MAKE UP STREET OUTFIT SUGGESTED BY CLAIRE McCARDELL

T-Shirts

Sports standby is now a street and evening style

Ever since U.S. women took over men's T-shirts they have worn them for picnics, tennis and other muscular enterprises. This they still do. But their affection for this garment has now carried it beyond the realm of athletics. This summer T-shirts in a variety of colors, with hoods and turtle necks, will also appear as costumes for street and evening wear. To illustrate this, LIFE asked three top designers to choose shirts and adapt them for both town and country. Best thing about the new fashion: even good T-shirts cost only $3.95.

SAME T-SHIRT as worn above appears here over bathing suit.

...from Lovely Silver Masterpieces!

Choose wisely when you choose your sterling, for you are making a life-time choice. Today, you can have beauty in your silver that has been famous for hundreds of years.

When you ask to see Watson Sterling, you can choose from silver inspired by masterpieces of the world's greatest silversmiths. And you'll find in each of the twelve Watson patterns not only their great beauty of design, but the same painstaking craftsmanship . . . in depth of cut . . . clearness of detail . . .

harmony and grace of proportion ... that make these original pieces collectors' items today.

Ask your jeweler to show you Watson Sterling now. Any of the patterns shown here, or Windsor Rose, Victoria, Lotus, George II, Colonial Fiddle, John Alden or Colonial Antique.

Each is designed to bring you the beauty and distinction of the finest sterling silver ever made. The Watson Company, 1468 Watson Park, Attleboro, Mass.

You can buy a complete, 6-pc. place-setting in Watson Sterling for as low as $23, federal tax included.

CLASS OF '48

Its members are going into a world eager to give them jobs

In these last few fleeting days before graduation the scene above repeats itself thousands of times. In every U.S. college little groups of seniors get together for bull sessions, like these seven seniors at Cornell. Although American educators may worry about the fact that college students seem more concerned with getting jobs than getting an education (Editorial, page 46), the talk in all these sessions is the same—about jobs and the immediate future.

For the class of '48, the prospect for jobs and future is very promising. The class is the biggest in U.S. history: more than 250,-000 graduates. But there are more jobs for the graduates than ever before. Big industries, who could not hire bright young men during the long war years, are suddenly finding themselves short of junior executives. Technical concerns need lots of college-trained technicians. As a result personnel representatives of all the biggest U.S. companies have been jamming college placement offices to fight over likely recruits. Bright students are flooded with offers. Even an average student can have his pick of three or four good jobs. In 1948, $50 a week is a low starting salary.

So, like most seniors this year these students at Cornell University in Ithaca, N.Y. are not discussing what jobs they would like to have but which ones they will accept. Like their classmates most of them are in their middle 20s and have been kicked around by the Army or Navy. They make their decisions gravely. Some are after quick success, like Jim Ford (pp. 114, 115). A few are idealists, like Lindsey Grant (p. 116). But most, like Doug Foote (pp. 112, 113), are after good training, security and a solid chance to make their way.

CAREERIST

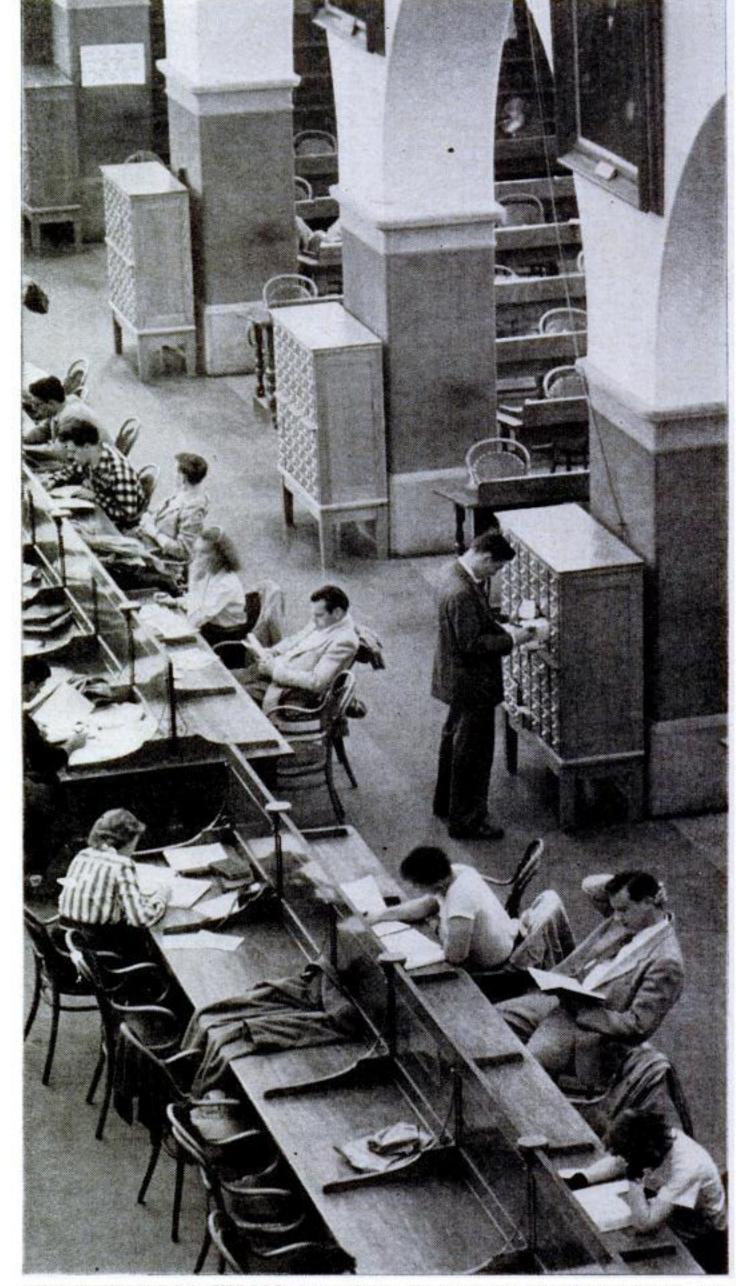

Doug Foote takes job offering good future with big company

The bull session at the Chi Phi house at Cornell started after dinner one evening when Doug Foote (spotlighted, above) leaned against the bookcase and said that he had taken a job with the Armstrong Cork Co. of Lancaster, Pa. Everyone was glad the question was finally settled—Doug had had a hard time making up his mind.

Doug Foote is 26. He came to Cornell from Grosse Pointe, Mich. and normally would have graduated five years ago. Instead he quit college as a sophomore and spent five years as a medium-bomber pilot. Two years ago he got out of the Army with a D.F.C., a Purple Heart, an Air Medal with 11 oak-leaf clusters. For a while he considered taking a fabulous job as a $900-a-month airline pilot in China. But college was very pleasant. Doug changed his curriculum from engineering to economics, joined a drinking club called Kappa Beta Phi (backward: Phi Beta Kappa) and avoided entangling romances. His golf score, in the low 80s, was somewhat higher than his scholastic average.

Feeling too old to waste time sampling different businesses, Doug, like many other U.S. seniors, wanted to work for a big company which had a good training program and offered a steady, lucrative future to someone who could be a good company man. Doug had offers of four jobs, including a tempting one from Procter & Gamble. He took Armstrong Cork, its training program (opposite page) and its $275 to start.

Doug has been around enough to have few illusions, but he is not worldly. For most of his life he has done things with his own age group and under supervision of school, college or the Army. He is not sure how he will get along in the outside world. But big, good-natured Doug Foote ought to get on fine. He likes American business; American business appears to like him; and they both know they have a big stake in each other.

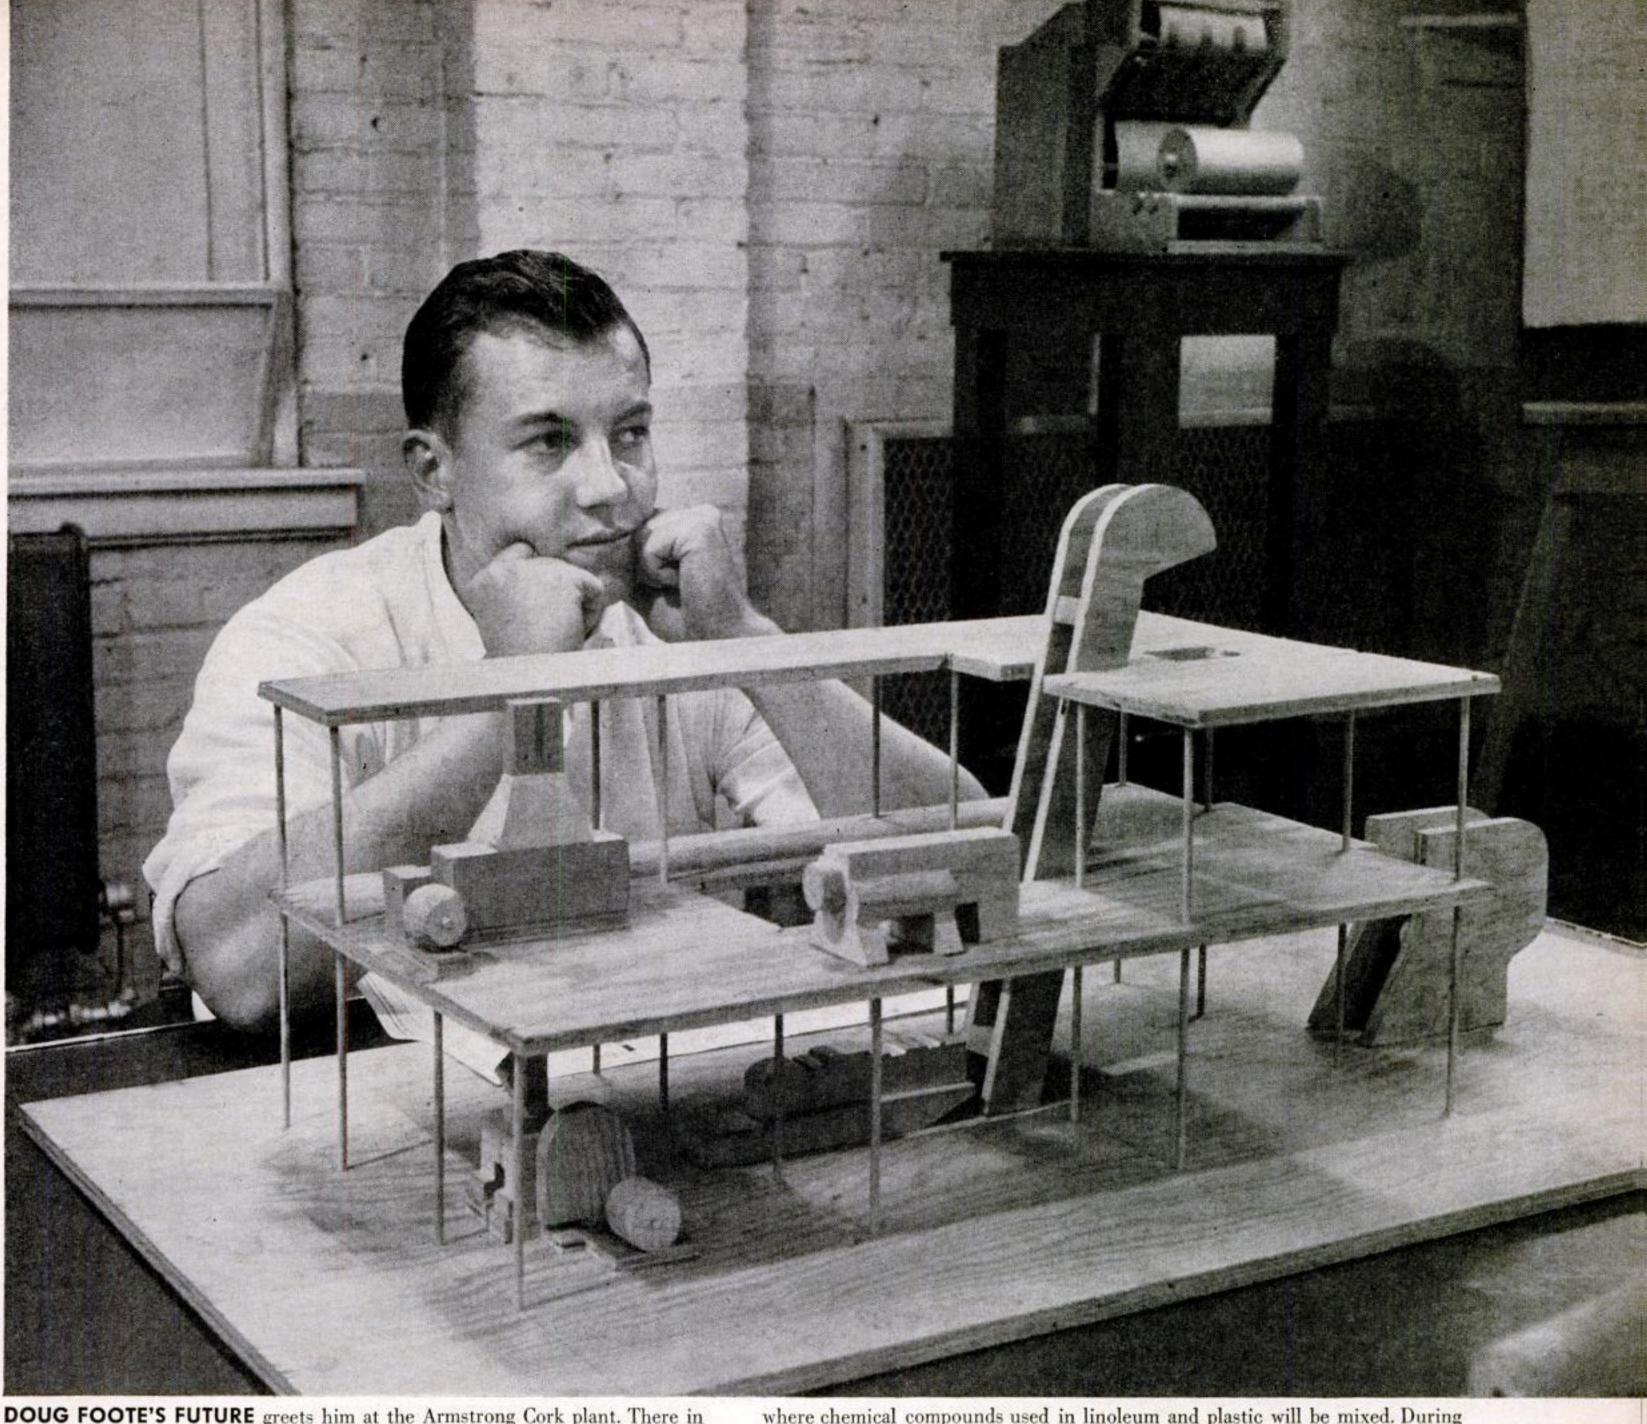

CRAMMING FOR FINALS, Doug Foote (lower right) scratches his head as he wades through an economics textbook in main reading room of Cornell's library.

AT SENIOR PICNIC on the shores of Lake Cayuga, Doug (right center) raises his fraternity beer stein to toast a friend. This year's picnic featured all the beer a couple could drink for a dollar and was considered a partial flop when some of the beer was left over. Picnics are a favorite recreation at Cornell in the spring.

DOUG FOOTE'S FUTURE greets him at the Armstrong Cork plant. There in one of the company classrooms he studies this modernistic model of a pilot plant where chemical compounds used in linoleum and plastic will be mixed. During his six months' training period Doug will live in a dormitory with other trainees.

INTERVIEW at Cornell with Wayne LaPoe (left) of Armstrong was Doug's first step in getting his job.

SELLING Armstrong products to industries will be Doug's job. Here he talks to Armstrong customer.

PRESIDENT of Armstrong Cork, H. W. Prentis Jr. (right), shakes Doug's hand on visit to the plant.

GO-GETTER

Jim Ford, whiz-bang seller of pots and pans, is heading for success under his own steam COOKING LESSON is given by Jim Ford to the Wear-Ever salesmen who will comprise his crew this summer. In a rented kitchen Jim demonstrates lesson No.

1: How to bake a cake in a Wear-Ever saucepan. The salesmen will then cook cake for housewives they visit. Jim has never had a cake collapse on him yet.

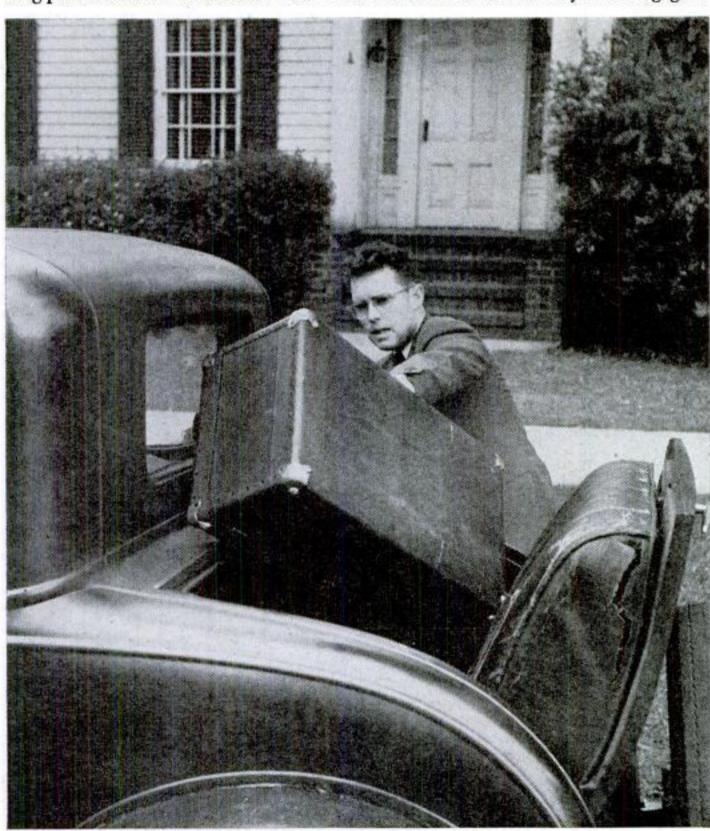

Leaning against the other end of the bookcase (top of opposite page), Jim Ford of Franklin, Pa., Doug's ex-roommate, agreed that Doug had been wise to choose a training-program setup but that kind of job was not for him. He had decided he could do a lot better on his own.

"It's a great world," says Jim, "but the only way you can sit on top is to climb up the hard way." Jim, who is Doug's age and in the top third of his class scholastically, has been supporting himself for eight years—in a road gang, a fish cannery, a chair factory, a year and a half in the Coast Guard. Last summer, selling Wear-Ever cooking utensils from door to door, he made a good deal more than $100 a week. He is enthusiastic about his wares. "I'm not selling pots and pans," he insists, "I'm selling a new way of cooking." ("Ah, they're still pots and pans," says his roommate.) After graduation Jim will be a Wear-Ever field supervisor and is already teaching students who will work under him. He thinks he can triple last summer's weekly income. He is not worried about war, but worries that too many people won't work hard enough. This month he will get married to Doris Winter. He is very impressed with his fiancée. "You know," he says, "she's worked since she was 15."

WITH FIANCEE Doris Winter of Syracuse at senior picnic, Jim discusses wedding plans. He sold her a set of Wear-Ever last summer before they were engaged.

ON THE ROAD Jim pulls his heavy Wear-Ever sample case out of the rumble seat of his old Model A Ford coupe. He will sell door-to-door this summer.

IN NEW APARTMENT where they will live, Jim and Doris decide on decorations. Apartments are hard to get in Binghamton, but Jim found one quickly.

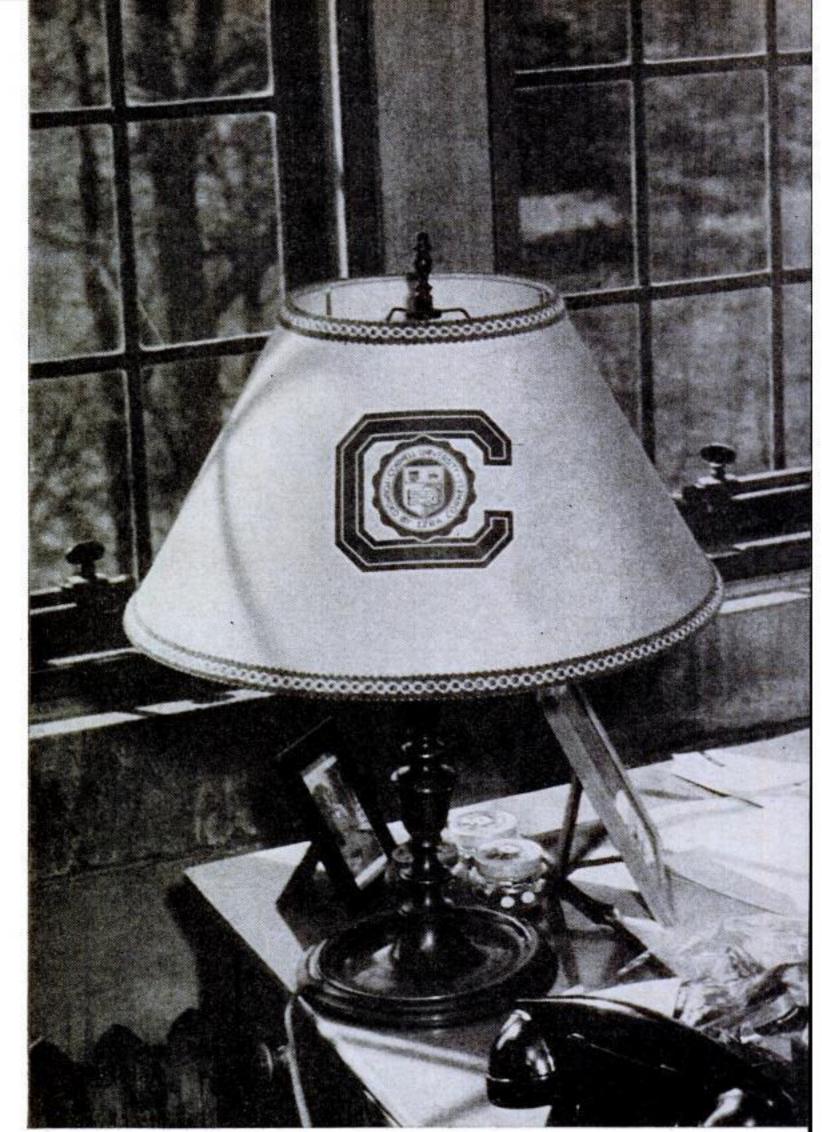

RINGING DOORBELL, Jim is greeted by a little girl. His approach with children and housewives is warm and friendly, which helps him get into the house.

A SELF-DENYING IDEALIST

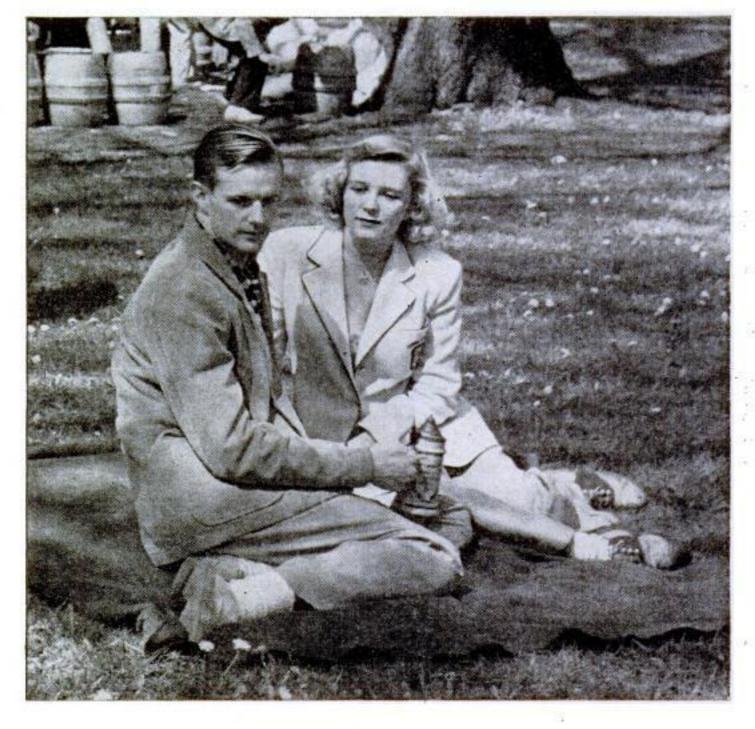

Lindsey Grant is not like most of the class of '48. He is much younger. In spite of two years in the Navy he will graduate at the age of 21. And he is not out to make his fortune. He wants to do something constructive about the world. A student of China and the Chinese language, he could have had his choice of $3,000-a-year China-branch jobs with a number of banks. "But I found," he explains, "that the banks want to make money for Americans, not for the Chinese, so I said, 'No, thanks.'" He said "No, thanks" to some oil companies too and decided to take examinations for the State Department. If all goes well he will be in China next year. Lindsey comes from New York City, is a member of Phi Beta Kappa. His Cornell roommate, Sam Pierce, a law student who is president of the school's Law Association, is a Negro. They study hard but knock off once in a while to talk politics. Pierce is for Dewey, a campus favorite. Lindsey, an independent, does not approve of Truman, likes some of Wallace's ideas, but hopes to vote for Vandenberg as the best alternative.

A GIRL CAMPUS LEADER WHO

For girls in the class of '48, jobs are far fewer and less attractive than for the boys. American business, which during the war was eager to hire smart women, now wants men. But Sylvia Kilbourne (above) could have had a good job if she had wanted. As president of the Women's Student Government Association, she has been giving the coeds the best government they have had in a long time. She lives in a special room with two telephones, has a part-time secretary to help her run W.S.G.A.

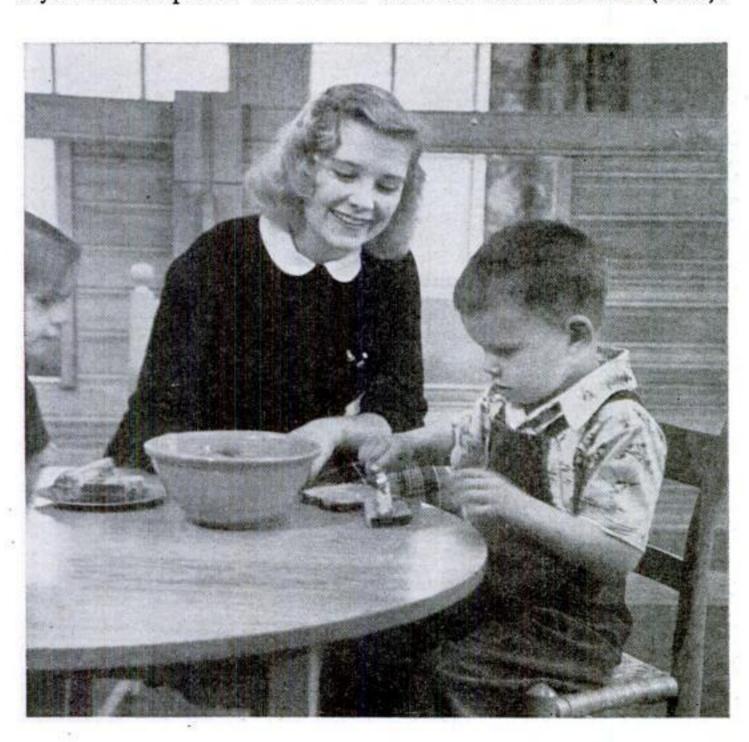

An earnest girl, Sylvia faces her future squarely. "Coed seniors talk about big jobs and careers," she says, "But in the back of their minds they really think about marriage." Sylvia is getting married next year and is not interested in a job. Her fiance, an ex-fighter pilot named Bill Hosie (below, left), of East Aurora, N.Y., will graduate next, February and stay at Cornell to study physics for his master's degree. Sylvia will stay on too at graduate school to get her M.N.S.-Master of Nutritional Science. Now she is studying child feeding, and twice a week she takes 5-year-olds on picnics and teaches them to make sandwiches (below).

A SOUGHT-AFTER ENGINEER

Bud Bartholow of Baltimore, Md. lives in the Phi Gamma Delta house, where he shares a room with Jim Ford (pp. 114, 115) and a set of Wear-Ever aluminum. He has been taking chemical engineering, the toughest course in Cornell. While the other students are having beer parties and picnics on the lake shore Bud has to stay in his room cramming or in the laboratory fussing with beakers and retorts. His hard work has paid off well this spring. He has been interviewed by more than 20 companies. Like all chemical engineers, Bud was faced with a difficult choice. He had to decide whether to go into sales work or production and presumably make a lot of money or whether to go into research work and some day make a name for himself. Bud chose production. Last week he took a job with the Riegel Paper Co. in Milford, N. J. For Bud the transition from college to a job will be easy. When he gets to Milford he will go right to work with familiar equipment. He will still have to spend long hours in a laboratory, but for doing this he will start at a salary of $300 a month.

THE CORNELL CAMPUS LIES ON A HILL ABOVE ITHACA AND LAKE CAYUGA'S FAMOUS WATERS (OUT OF SIGHT AT RIGHT). DOWN THE SLOPE IS MEN'S DORMITORY

LAST DAYS

As graduation nears, the seniors are wistful at leaving Cornell

Amid the talk of jobs and the bright future, the 1,350 seniors at Cornell suddenly found that they could count on their fingers the days left to them at college. And suddenly Cornell became a cherished place, full of rather sweet memories—the sailing on Lake Cayuga, the picnics in Stewart Park, the skiing on the slopes near the town of Ithaca, the walks down the deep ravines, the beery singing in the fraternity houses. The lovely campus seemed even more beautiful, the dances more fun than ever and even the hoary institution of the campus Apollo struck them as being completely hilarious. Once the seniors had looked forward to weekends and vacations as a welcome release from the campus. But now, like seniors anywhere and anytime, they almost wished they could stay a little longer.

AT BIG SPRING DANCE in Cornell's enormous 2-acre drill hall, thousands of Cornell students and their dates stayed up till 3 in the morning dancing to the music of two orchestras. Against the curtains in background are huge imitation drums. Figure silhouetted on curtain is the shadow of a dummy clown (center).

CAMPUS APOLLO Harry ("Spider") Schaufert proudly sports the costume that won him the title. Next year Spider is going to graduate school at Cornell and study business administration to be sure of getting a good job. "I know the power of the Almighty Dollar," he says, "and I know there's no use bucking it."

IN THE FRENCH RESISTANCE Malraux (above, left) rose swiftly to the rank of lieutenant colonel. Units under his command distinguished themselves in the fighting in the Vosges Mountains during the winter of 1944-45. Earlier they had played a big part in isolating Hitler's crack First Das-Reich Division while the Allies landed in Normandy.

De Gaulle's Idea Man

Explorer, novelist, soldier, former pro-Communist revolutionary, André Malraux now works with De Gaulle against French Communism

by Charles C. Wertenbaker

HERE was once an old man who lived in the mountains with his young wife and an old black cat. The wife was like many wives and would go off alone on long walks in the mountains, but the cat was no ordinary cat. The cat could talk. The lonely man and the animal would have conversations together, the cat sitting on his shoulder. One day while the wife was out on her daily walk the cat whispered to the man, 'You think your wife goes walking alone, but I know it isn't so.' When the woman returned that night her husband killed her. Then he turned to the cat for comfort. But the cat regarded him coldly. 'I can talk,' said the cat, 'so also I can lie.'"

Some years ago André Malraux, who had recently become famous in Europe as the revolutionary author of the revolutionary novel, Man's Fate, used to tell this story to a young waif of Paris named Agnès Capri. Agnès Capri has since grown famous in Paris in her own right as a nightclub entertainer, but she still remembers some of the strange and wonderful stories Malraux told her. This particular story may be illustrative of Malraux's belief in the gullibility of man. Agnès Capri says that when she heard it, so convincing was the narration, she believed it to be true. Perhaps Malraux did also. Throughout his adventurous and paradoxical career he has combined a catlike amusement at the frailty of human beings with a passionate belief in the veracity of his own words and actions in their interest.

Malraux is now only 46, but he has several careers behind him. He has been a wanderer in exotic lands, a digger for lost treasure, an active revolutionary who collaborated with professionals sent out from Moscow to bring Communism to the Far East. He has written six novels, one of which (Man's Fate) ranks with the finest of his generation. He fought for the Spanish Republic, for the French Resistance, in the defeated French Army of 1940 and the victorious one of 1944–45. He has been four times wounded, twice a prisoner of the Germans, and once was forcibly detained by his own government for collecting a couple of tons of statuary the government thought belonged to France. All this may be only a preface to the careers that lie before Malraux. He is a philosopher of art whose theories have already begun to influence esthetic criticism. His literary stature in Europe is eminent and unique; he stands almost alone between the older French authors, whose greatness is linked with lost generations, and the postwar writers of less talent. Finally, Malraux looks forward with considerable confidence to becoming the second most powerful man in France—if General de Gaulle becomes the first.

The general may achieve this position at any time. There have been several occasions during the last year of shifting crises when he probably could have overthrown the French government, if he had not been too good a Frenchman to weaken his country by so doing. De Gaulle is determined, if possible, to become head of the French state on his own terms and by democratic means. His chances have gone up and down with the political temperature of France and Europe, and even with the physical temperature.

His prospects appear to be less good now than they were after last October's municipal elections, when 6,000,000 Frenchmen, disgusted with a government that did not govern, voted for his movement. For six months now the middle-road premier, Robert Schuman, has governed with energy and decision and, since the Italian elections in April, France has not heard the loud knock of Communism at her back door. But so delicate is the political balance in France and so sensitive is France to political tremors throughout Europe that De Gaulle's hour may come with any fresh crisis. And Malraux, if not the planner, is at least the consultant architect for the new political structure De Gaulle hopes to build. For those who would like to inspect the structure in advance, Malraux is also an articulate guide.

In spite of his past accomplishments and future intentions, André Malraux is not very well known in the U.S., where he is sometimes confused with the biographer of Shelley, André Maurois. Malraux once came here to lecture, to raise money for the Spanish Loyalists, but since he could speak no English he did not reach a large audience.

The literary-political man is a type more European than American, although there have been examples of him in the U.S., notably Playwright Robert Sherwood and Poet Archibald MacLeish. But whereas these men took time out from literary activity to help President Roosevelt with a bit of advice or a turn of phrase, Malraux has been for 25 years an active political worker. His novels have been a record of his political adventures and conflicts. In this he resembles the Italian Ignazio Silone and the Hungarian Arthur Koestler. The three of them, Malraux, Silone and Koestler, are probably the leading literary examples of that new man of our time, the intellectual who has been a Communist, crypto-Communist or fellow traveler and is now seeking political shelter from the Far Left. Malraux, having discovered his shelter in the lee of a tall man, Charles de Gaulle, finds it spacious and safe enough to contain all his fellow Frenchmen.

Malraux met De Gaulle in April 1945, when the ex-revolutionary had already grown fearful that Communism would engulf the thing he had come to cherish most, Western European culture. A spark flew between the two. "He is one of the men for whom I have the greatest admiration," Malraux told a friend, "and it isn't in my nature to admire people." When Malraux got out of the army, De Gaulle took him into his government as cultural attaché, then made him minister of information. So little was known of Malraux's politics then that several Paris papers listed his party affiliation as Communist. Since De Gaulle organized his own party (Rally of the French People, or R.P.F.) in April 1947 to remake the French state and put himself at the head of it, Malraux has been his closest confidant.

When De Gaulle goes off to his country hideaway at Colom-beyles-deux-Eglises to rest and talk and plan, Malraux usually goes with him. The general will sprawl his great length in a chair, smoking a cigaret, and throw ideas at Malraux, who will pace restlessly up and down the room, agreeing or disagreeing, embellishing his thoughts until the general interrupts with a new remark. Malraux is the only one of De Gaulle's disciples who will disagree with him and argue about it. He is a smallish, wiry, nervous man and he cannot keep still when he talks. He either walks or gesticulates and usually does both. He has small hands and long beautiful fingers, which he often brings together to close a point. He makes his points in one-two-three fashion, beginning with "in the first place" and putting up a verbal signpost at each turn of his argument. But this does not make him easy to follow, because he is liable to go for a long stroll through the intellectual woods before he gets to the second place. Furthermore, he talks as rapidly as his mind can formulate the words, without bothering always to form them with his lips, and since he speaks with his mouth almost closed, it requires a good deal of training to understand him. He punctuates his sentences with frequent sniffs, and occasionally he pulls out his handkerchief and blows a dry blast on his nose. His thick, dark brown hair sometimes falls over his eyes while he is talking, and then he will brush it back with an irritated gesture. When not interrupted he is capable of talking for many hours. Words seem to act on him as a stimulating drug; his dark gray eyes grow round and glow, as if he would pop them at his listener.

The charges against Malraux

TF you sit long enough at a Left Bank cafe you can hear almost ■ anything bad about Malraux: that he is a drug-taker, a libertine, a political charlatan. The first charge, which takes no account of his invariable lucidity, is probably based on his nervous habits the fluttering hands, the protruding eyes, the sniff that twitches his face. The second could be derived from a reading of his books, which contain long discussions of lust for lust's sake and erotic passages that make Boccaccio read like Mother Goose. The third charge was inevitable, since in these times the man who changes his political colors is seldom given credit for intellectual honesty.

MALRAUX SLEEPS after the crash landing of his plane (opposite). Members of the crew took this picture, autographed the back and presented it to him.

And Malraux's motives have been more complex than those of many other disenchanted Communists and near-Communists. Malraux himself still insists that he is a man of the Left. "It is not I who have evolved, but events," he says, and there is much truth in this statement.

Neither his intellect nor his creative genius could have been predicted from his childhood. He was born in Montmartre on Nov. 3. 1901, of bourgeois parents who were separated when Georges André Malraux was not yet 4 years old. He grew up in the house of his maternal grandmother, cared for devotedly by his mother and grandmother. But he missed his nervous, imaginative father, who held a job in the civil service and came to see the boy once a week on his day off. André had an indifferent record at school but went on to the Lycée Condorcet and then to the School of Oriental Languages. There he studied Sanskrit because, he said later, "It's the easiest thing to learn; the pupils don't understand it and the teachers don't either." But the East was already exercising a seductive influence on him, and the conjunction of this and a somewhat similar attraction exercised by a woman named Clara Goldschmidt was soon to start him on his first adventure.

He met Clara Goldschmidt at the publishing house of Kra, where he had found a job in the bookstore. Clara was a strong-minded woman, four years older than Malraux; she was attracted by his good looks and intelligence but worried by his anxiety and his restlessness. Attraction prevailed. Clara married him, and with her money financed an expedition to Indo-China.

Malraux had been reading up on the Khmer country, a wild jungle land in Indo-China. His reading had convinced him that there were ruined temples in this region, and reason told him that these temples would be decorated with statuettes and bas-reliefs. These treasures he determined to get. But profit was only a secondary motive. In The Royal Way, a not entirely fictitious account of his expedition, he wrote of the hero's desire for adventure:

'The sense of death's austere dominion pervaded all his being, persistent as the throb of blood across his temples, imperious as sexual desire. . . . Whence, indeed, if not from death, came his fierce desire, heady with odors of death-ridden flesh, for all that is immortal? So, like a blind man wildly lashing out, he strove to fight death down-and make a sport of it."

Malraux and Clara stayed more than a year in the jungle, with a caravan of buffalo carts to carry their gear and untrustworthy natives as guides. The country was infested with spiders, centipedes, mosquitoes, ants, leeches and lice; malaria and dysentery were accepted diseases. André suffered more than his strong wife, but he stuck it out until he found what he was seeking. He loaded his heavy trophies on the buffalo carts and got them out of the jungle. But when he tried to take them out of French Indo-China he was "detained for investigation" at Angkor.

Malraux's commission from the government to search for archaeological specimens was, apparently, ambiguous. Malraux interpreted it to mean that what he found was his own property. The government thought differently. He was tried, convicted and sentenced to three years' imprisonment. Clara took a boat back to France to fight for his freedom. With the help of literary friends, who testified that surely he had never intended to keep the treasures for himself, she got the verdict of guilty reversed to innocent by a court of appeal. Malraux returned to France in 1925.

He was still only 24 and his appetite for adventure was barely whetted.

In Indo-China, Malraux had found a cause that promised to give dignity to the life of adventure. This was the struggle of Asia against European domination. After a few weeks in France he went back to Indo-China, the sturdy Clara still at his side, and in Saïgon founded a pro-native paper called L'Indochine. But the core of the whirlwind then rising in Asia was at Canton, where the heirs of Sun Yat-sen, advised by agents of the Communist International, were to expand a revolt against British imperialism into a national liberation movement. Malraux joined the Kuomintang, became a member of the Revolutionary Committee of Twelve, worked in close collaboration with the Russian agent, Borodin, and the new Nationalist leader, Chiang Kai-shek. His department was propaganda.

But Malraux was no desk propagandist. A words of the professional revolutionary. He was subject to spells of fever, fits of depression, moments of deep and sometimes bitter self-examination. But except for one trip back to France, caused by illness, he stayed with the revolution from 1925 until 1927. Then he spectacularly broke with Chiang Kai-shek and left China for good. He was disillusioned, not by the revolution but by what he considered Chiang's betrayal of it.

CLARA

GOLDSCHMIDT

Malraux says he never joined the Communist party. If the internal evidence of his books is to be believed, he had little sympathy for its ideology but was lured by excitement and the urge to throw himself into what then seemed to him a struggle for mankind. There is a passage in Man's Fate in which one man's sacrifice for another, and for mankind, rises to the sublimest heights. But in another passage Malraux appears to reduce the quest for adventure to a quest for power. Speaking of Pierre Garine in The Conquerors, he writes, "Systems were nothing to him. He was ready to adopt any that circumstances might impose on him. It was an atmosphere more than anything else, and the hopes that a general upheaval held out, that attracted him. . . . Of desiring any course of triumphant action, or of preparing for it, or of bringing his life into line with it, he was totally incapable. Neither in mind nor in character was he fitted for any such thing. Yet, like a disease, persistent, tenacious, he felt within him a craving for power."

Back from the East stuffed with melodramatic experiences, Malraux settled down in Paris to become a writer, supporting himself by working as art director for the publishing house N.R.F. (Nouvelle Revue Française). Before going to Asia he had written a thin volume of prose poems, Paper Moons, which critics had praised. In 1928 he published The Conquerors, a story of the Canton insurrection; in 1930 The Royal Way, a tale based on the trip through the Khmer country; in 1933 Man's Fate, which deals with the Shanghai insurrection of 1927. Although he has since written three more novels, Days of Wrath (about a Central European antifascist), Man's Hope (about the Spanish civil war) and La Lutte avec l'Ange ("Struggle with the Angel," about World War II and not yet translated), it is on Man's Fate that Malraux's literary reputation securely rests. It is the most integrated and most deeply felt of all his novels, and probably the greatest novel of revolution the 20th Century has yet produced. It won him the Goncourt Prize, which in France carries considerably more prestige than the Pulitzer Prize in the U.S., and made Malraux the literary idol of the Left wherever it was translated. When he heard he had won the prize Malraux declared jubilantly, "When I'm 50 I'll win the Nobel Prize." He may well do so.

MALRAUX was characteristically quick in taking up the responsibilities of a left-wing spokesman. In 1933 he was widely quoted as saying, "If a war were to break out, we must know that we have only one country, the Soviet Union." The next year he trotted off to Moscow to a writers' congress and later reported that he was attracted by the possibility of a "heroic life" which Russia offered to many human beings. Yet Malraux was independent and

More and more motorists are discovering that they use less oil, use less gasoline and get more power by using Premium Sinclair Opaline Motor Oil regularly. There's a very simple reason for this:—

You use less OIL because Sinclair Opaline provides better piston seal. Special additives assure this result. For the same reason—better piston seal—you also use less GASOLINE when you use Premium Sinclair Opaline Motor Oil regularly. And you get MORE POWER, smoother power, thanks to increased engine efficiency.

courageous enough to argue Trotsky's right of asylum in France. Trotsky repaid him by trying to educate him out of his "romanticism" and the two engaged in a literary feud that raged in the Nouvelle Revue for months.

But neither his literary nor his political activities—least of all his job—could keep Malraux from adventure for long. In 1934 he made a hazardous flight with one companion to the edge of the Rub al Khali desert in the Arabian peninsula near the Red Sea. While the plane circled at a low altitude Malraux took pictures of a dead town which he believes to be the lost city-kingdom of the Queen of Sheba. Two years later, when the civil war broke out in Spain, he organized an air force of foreign volunteers for the Loyalists, flew as machine gunner on many dangerous missions (he cannot fly himself), and was wounded twice. Afterward came his novel, Man's Hope, about his experiences in Spain. Man's Hope exhibited a Malraux who was growing critical of the dogmatism of his Marxist comrades, although held to them by the common cause of antifascism.

It was the German-Russian nonaggression pact of 1939 that finally caused Malraux, with many other left-wing intellectuals, to lose faith in the Soviet Union. For two decades, up to the signing of the pact, a growing number of bright young social idealists, worshiping John Reed as a prophet, had followed the star of the Soviet Union. For most of them the pact put out the star and, whatever other guides they may have turned to follow, they became Communism's implacable foes. Now in their middle years, they-the Malrauxs, the Koestlers, the Silones-wield an ever more powerful influence. "Maybe Russia was right to sign that pact from the point of view of her own interests," Malraux says now, straining hard to give the devil his due, "but it was a betrayal of the French proletariat." This statement reveals his increasing absorption with Western values since his return from the Far East and is a far cry from Man's Fate's hero's dream of "the U.S.S.R. increased to 600,000,000 men."

Malraux becomes "Colonel Berger"

MALRAUX entered World War II with his customary bravery and flair for the spectacular. He tried to get a commission in the army but was rejected as unfit for military service. With pull he managed to enlist as a second-class private in the tank corps. He was wounded in combat and on June 16, 1940 was taken prisoner and interned in a camp near Sens. If the Germans had suspected his identity he would undoubtedly have spent the rest of the war in a concentration camp, but his real first name is Georges and he was so named on his papers. He was put to work on a nearby farm. This enabled him to get in touch with a younger half-brother, Roland, who met him one night in a patch of woods near the farm with civilian clothes and a pair of shoes. The shoes fitted Roland, who was barely 18, and were far too small for André; nevertheless they carried him 10 kilometers to a railway station, where he caught a train to freedom. He made his way to the south of France and began work as a Resistance organizer. This dark, dangerous period served to accelerate the change in his political outlook.

Throughout the years of Vichy rule and German occupation, Malraux worked with the underground, sabotaging rolling stock, dynamiting rails and bridges, collecting arms dropped by parachute from British planes. "Colonel Berger," the pseudonym he eventually took, became a famous name in the Resistance. In July 1944, while he was driving with another Allied officer carrying important papers, their car was ambushed by German troops. The chauffeur was killed, Malraux wounded. To enable the other officer to escape, Malraux coolly stepped out of the car and was taken prisoner again. He was turned over to the Gestapo and sent to Toulouse prison but was liberated by the French Forces of the Interior a few weeks later. From then until the war's end he fought in the regular French army.

The war had brought sorrow, as well as adventure, into Malraux's life. His two half-brothers, Roland and Claude, both were killed by the Germans. Be-were killed by the Germans. Before the war he had left his wife Clara and fallen in love with a beautiful young woman he had met at the N.R.F., Josette Clotis. She died in a train accident during the Liberation. Perhaps these losses deepened Malraux's already deep sense of tragedy. By the winter of 1945 he was as gaunt and as hollow-eyed as he must have been in those early years in China; his hunched shoulders seemed to curve around a hollow chest. His fear of Communism was intense, and its depth was exposed by his frequent use of the adjective "Asiatic," but it was perhaps given an additional urgency by his knowledge of French Communist strength, as displayed in the Resistance. He had seen De Gaulle only once, at a formal presentation of arms, but his mind was already turning on the question of whether De Gaulle might save France from Communism. Three months later he answered that question to his own satisfaction, and the two men have been together ever since.

That the Catholic-raised, army-trained De Gaulle and the exleftist Malraux agree on most political essentials is not as surprising as it might at first appear. Both are familiar with authoritarian precepts. Both see Communism as the greatest menace in France, in Europe, in the world. Both would go to almost any extreme to halt it.

The political philosophy of Gaullism, according to Malraux, rests on the assumption that democracy cannot function in the presence of a powerful Communist party. "Where is democracy? Only in countries where there is no powerful Communist party." He believes that the only way to treat the Communists is to make them behave—by force, if necessary. "We should not outlaw the Communist party, provided it becomes a national party, subscribing clearly and honestly its quota of beliefs to the mass of ideologies from which the French people could freely pick and choose." And if not? "That would be too bad for them."

If there are question marks about De Gaulle's policy—and Malraux admits that is one of the reproaches most frequently made by the general's critics—they are question marks deliberately maintained by De Gaulle himself. "We have no faith in program but only in objectives," is a favorite phrase of the general's which Malraux likes to repeat. Any American politician would understand De Gaulle's purposeful obscurity.

The De Gaulle program for France

ON some points, however, De Gaulle has made clear his intentions. He wants to revise the constitution of the Fourth Republic in order to vest greater power in the executive. Cabinet ministers, in his view, should be responsible to the executive, as they are in the U.S., and not to Parliament or to political parties. He, as chief executive, would be responsible to the people; but he would be elected for a term, and could not be removed from office during that term. This system, he thinks, would give France the governmental stability and effectiveness she has lacked, without destroying the democratic privilege of popular sovereignty.

Under Gaullism, France's traditional parliamentary democracy would be modified into something more nearly resembling the corWho said-"A dog wouldn't be happy without fleas"?

porate state. There would be a parliament, with perhaps two chambers. One would be elected by majority vote (instead of by proportional representation, as at present), thereby making it likely that the top party would obtain an absolute majority. De Gaulle has often advocated a second chamber composed of representatives of management, labor and the professions. He has never made it clear exactly how much power the parliament should have, but it would certainly be more limited than at present.

Not only what De Gaulle calls the "dictatorship" of political parties, but the existing structure of trade unionism, would disappear in the form of government that takes shape in the haze of tobacco smoke over the two men's heads as they talk. Malraux will point out that the largest trade union federation in France, the C.G.T., is already controlled by the Communists, so it is silly to talk about the "independence" of unionism. De Gaulle's plans, still not explained in detail, would appear to call for industry-wide syndicates, with representatives of management and labor included on their executive boards. In case of deadlock between workers and managers, the state would step in and make the final decision.

The Gaullist foreign policy

IN foreign policy both De Gaulle and Malraux believe that the future of France is beside America. It is probably Malraux's influence that has led De Gaulle to talk more and more of the "Atlantic" world, instead of the "European" world he used to emphasize. It disturbs Malraux that De Gaulle is not more highly regarded in the U.S. If De Gaulle is disturbed, he takes pains not to show it,

Although the general's public personality, which is not distinguished for warmth, has on occasion made him seem cool toward the U.S., he is personally neither friendly nor hostile. He is primarily a coldly passionate and aggressive patriot, and he believes that at this time French interests coincide with those of the U.S. He wants France, rather than Britain, to be the core of a Western European coalition standing firm against westward-marching Communism. If and when that coalition becomes solid, if and when that advance is halted, there is no reason to believe he would fail to use France's power to bargain with the U.S.

The two principal objections to De Gaulle's program come largely from opposite sides of the hall. Many conservatives and many anti-Communist liberals fear that he would fail, "as he failed before" when he headed the post-liberation government, and that the Communists would fall heir to his power. On the other side the Communists, of course, say that a Gaullist regime would inevitably lead to dictatorship. Although few people in France really believe that De Gaulle is at heart a dictator, not a few of them fear that his paternalism would harden under pressure, and they especially fear some of the antidemocratic forces that have adhered to his cause.

If De Gaulle does come to power, Malraux will almost certainly become his minister of information—or of propaganda—unless the two should split before then. Those who believe that a falling out is likely base their case on the facts that De Gaulle has never kept a strong man close to him for long, and that Malraux is as self-assertive and willful as the general. But whether or not they even-

LIFE-NBC Television to give millions "press privileges" at the Conventions

This summer, the vivid journalism of LIFE and expert television of NBC will be combined to bring some 5 million Americans the biggest political show on earth -the two major presidential conventions. 5 of the many questions to be cleared up on this biggest telecast in history follow.

1. "What goes on behind that door?" Who's deciding what? Wherever possible, LIFE's editors will take you behind hotel doors like this at the '44 Democratic Convention. LIFE-NBC behind-the-scenes television coverage will make things as exciting as if the millions who watch were actually there—with press privileges.

2. "How do the delegates get there?" LIFE's lively approach and ability to clarify the complicated will be put to good use showing televiewers just how delegates are selected and instructed. In material like this, NBC and LIFE will give millions an eye-witness view of democracy at work. Above: delegates at 1940 convention.

3. "What does a candidate do at a convention?" In addition to the customary on-stage shots of the candidates, this historic LIFE-NBC telecast will let millions in on what a candidate does off-stage-who he talks to, what he talks about, what he looks like and says in informal, unrehearsed moments. Above: Dewey at breakfast conference with Bricker, in 1944.

4. "Who are the men BEHIND the men we're voting for?" With LIFE and NBC, Americans will enter hotel rooms, lobbies, campaign headquarters, and seek out campaign managers, party bosses, floor leaders, others of influence. Above: Stassen, Willkie floor leader in '40, with Raymond Baldwin, Show will give fascinating insight into how LIFE editors work.

5. "What about the platform?" Platforms are largely arranged before the convention. But at the convention, pressure groups attempt to get favorable planks added. LIFE-NBC telecast will interview platform sub-committee heads like those above at 1940 convention, possibly show them actually at work. Seeing all this, millions will understand democracy better.

Televising of the Republican Convention will start June 21 and of the Democratic Convention July 12.

This historic, joint venture in journalism begins June 21st on these network stations:

tually split, Malraux presently speaks for De Gaulle both officially and unofficially. His two departments in the party are called, significantly, "propaganda" and "culture." In the minds of both men the two are wedded; inherent in the De Gaulle-Malraux philosophy is an appeal to qualities which they consider uniquely French but which have never been more precisely defined than "breadth of spirit" or "lucidity of expression."

Although "propaganda" and "culture" are words which have fewer unpleasant connotations in French than in English, they are sufficiently reminiscent of the technique of Dr. Goebbels to ring unpleasantly in the ears of those Frenchmen who remain suspicious of the purity of De Gaulle's conception of democracy. But Malraux is emphatic in saying that he wants an absolutely liberal regime for France's press, radio and cinema, and says he is opposed to censorship in any form. He believes the weakness of the French press has been that it has hesitated between the American idea of objectivity and the Soviet conception of a totally directed expression of opinion. Having hesitated, he thinks, the French press has succeeded in being neither completely objective nor subjective. He wants it to be the former, and he says bluntly, "France's press should be factual."

Malraux works all day at his crusade in the R.P.F. press headquarters at 19 Boulevard des Capucines, near the Opera. Late in the afternoon he steps out of the building, a neatly dressed man wearing a blue or gray double-breasted suit with a tie to match and a brown hat, and glances nervously along the curb for his car. When he sees the small Simca, with an old F.F.I. comrade behind the wheel, he walks across the sidewalk with quick, impatient steps, gets in and slams the door. As the car goes down to the Rue de Rivoli and up it to the Champs-Elysées, he blows his nose a couple of times and maybe lights a cigaret. He has been trying to cut down on them lately; he has at last reached middle age. He is thinking of what he must do when he gets home. He lives in a large apartment near the Bois de Boulogne with his new bride (formerly his sister-in-law, Roland's widow) and her two sons.

After dinner, until nearly one every morning, Malraux works for himself. He sits at a plain wooden table, writing in a cramped but clear longhand. On the white walls of his study hang some pieces of sculpture but no pictures. In the bookshelves are novels by Steinbeck, Dos Passos, Cocteau, Stendhal and Malraux. He thinks that Faulkner is the greatest living American writer; he also thinks that A Farewell to Arms and For Whom the Bell Tolls are the greatest love stories written since The Charterhouse of Parma. He writes with the telephone on the floor, because he hates to look at it. In a drawer, within easy reach of his hand, is a loaded revolver. "I am high on the list of those with whom the Communists would gladly dispense."

WITH HIS SECOND WIFE Malraux lives in the fashionable Bois de Boulogne section of Paris. Apartment contains many trophies of his early travels.

BALLET BALLADS

Bible, blues and folklore make new kind of song-and-dance show

At the waning end of a season Broadway was suddenly bounced back into liveliness by a different kind of song-and-dance show. Called Ballet Ballads, it told some familiar stories in unfamiliar ways—the story of Susanna and the Elders, which comes from the Bible's Apocrypha, the story of Davey Crockett's boastings, which comes from American folklore, and the story of Willie the Weeper, which comes from folk blues. All three of the ballets had music by Jerome Moross and lyrics by John Latouche, who wrote Ballad for Americans.

The scene above is from Willie the Weeper, whose reefer-ridden hero smokes himself into a series of dreamy triumphs and desolate awakenings. Here, in his most frenzied moment, Willie is wooed by the sinuous wiggling of a cocaine addict who then leads him in a frantic duet (next page). The Ballet Ballads, produced by Experimental Theatre, were so successful off Broadway that they moved up to a Broadway theater for a regular run.

SUSANNA AND THE ELDERS

Most charming of the Ballet Ballads is the story of Susanna and the Elders, which is set in a Midwest revival meeting. Susanna, danced by the choreographer, Katherine Litz, is surprised at her outdoor bath by two bearded Elders whose minds are "as mean and low as carrion crows on a stinkweed tree." After peeping at her from behind her garden wall (top picture), the Elders attempt to blackmail Susanna into submitting to them (middle). When she refuses they accuse her publicly of misbehaving "under a tree with some young feller." But Daniel (bottom picture, white suit) comes to Susanna's rescue. The Elders are questioned separately. Asked what kind of a tree Susanna misbehaved under, one Elder says it was a juniper, the other a cedar of Lebanon. They are thus caught in their perjury and the virtuous Susanna is vindicated.

DAVEY CROCKETT'S EXPLOITS

The Eccentricities of Davey Crockett, choreographed by Hanya Holm, resents the hero of the Alamo as the great teller of tall tales. Davey rags of his exploits from infancy when he was "swaddled in a mounin-lion skin" and fed on "wildcat mush and grizzly bear milk," to anhood when he "rassels with bears," routs Indians singlehanded ith his rifle "Betsy," fishes a sexy mermaid out of the Tennessee River nd bags a ghostly bear with a rifleshot in the behind. But the greatest f all Davey's boasts is his story of how he saved the world from a bmet. When the Comet (danced by Olga Lunick) comes carrying "fire nd brimstone in its tail," she and Davey do a violent adagio. Then rockett (Ted Lawrie) pulls out her tail (above) and wears it in his hat.

ERRY RIDE TO JEKYLL ISLAND TAKES ONE HOUR

Life Explores Jekyll Island

Georgia students vacation cheaply on the "Isle of 100 Millionaires"

The coast of Georgia, as its plain citizens are keeny aware, is a pretty fancy affair. It is lined with so nany private estates (mostly in Yankee hands) and xclusive islands like St. Simon and Sea Island, hat ordinary Georgians could until recently have ccess to only 3 of the state's 140 miles of beach. The weekending Georgia Tech students shown on hese pages are among the first visitors to a new adition to this slender public domain, famous Jekyll sland, a 9-mile stretch of beach off Brunswick, Ga. It is by no means virgin territory. For 400 years ts gloomy jungles of moss-covered oaks and open tretches of scrub palmetto had been controlled sucessively by Creek Indians, Spanish priests, cuthroat pirates, Englishmen, French refugees and fially rich northerners.

Since 1886, when a group of tycoons bought it or $125,000, Jekyll Island had been incorporatd as an exclusive club. Familiarly called the "Isle f 100 Millionaires," its early members included P. Morgan Sr., Cyrus McCormick, William K. Vanerbilt, James J. Hill and George F. Baker. In its I years the club spent $50 million on developnents: 11 private homes, a 200-room clubhouse, olf course, airport, tennis courts, bowling green nd a herd of wild boars from Italy. After the deression deepened in 1933 interest began to wane, nd last October the state of Georgia was able to buy ne paradise and turn it into a public park. Now, or $3 a night, vacationers like the Georgia Tech stuents can sleep in the island's clubhouse, use its eaches and ramble through the ruined mansions pp. 144, 147). One hardy Georgia Tech couple even ug for pirate gold (right). While they unearthed othing more than broken shells, and the mullet shermen caught nothing, Jekyll still seemed well orth the $675,000 that Georgia had paid for it.

Exploration PARTY picks its way through a tane of scrub palmetto in search of abandoned British fort.

FOR SUNRISE PRAYERS 25 of the party gather on the beach at 5 a.m. after getting to bed at 3 that morning. This is the spot where one of the last shiploads of African slaves to reach the U.S. was put up for auction, when the ship Wanderer was blown off course in 1858 and forced to dump its contraband cargo on Jekyll Island.

SURROUNDED BY LOUDSPEAKERS (ON SOFA) AND AMPLIFYING APPARATUS (ON FLOOR) JEAN WOOD, THE MULTIPLE BABY-SITTER, KEEPS EAR ON NINE CHILDREN

COMMUNITY SITTER

Army major wires babies for sound and keeps an ear on nine at once

The college students who live in the veterans' housing project at Shanks Village, N.Y. have an ideal neighbor who can baby-sit for seven families at a time.

Major Jean L. Wood, a graduate student at Columbia, performs this difficult feat with the apparatus shown above. He fashioned his multiple listening device out of an assortment of loudspeakers, old radio parts, an amplifier and a broken phonograph. When all his neighbors want to go out, he runs a microphone from his living room to the different cribs, turns up the amplifier until he can hear each baby breathing and labels each loudspeaker with a baby's name. Then he settles back on his couch and does his homework. Every 30 minutes he makes the rounds and checks each baby. So far they have never started crying all at once. The major tries not to think what will happen if they do.

SKIRTED EVENING BATHING SUITS LOOK LIKE HANDSOME EVENING GOWNS

FORMAL SWIM SUITS

They are convertible for splashing or dancing

Hollywood bathing-suit news last fortnight was, as usual, confused but eye-catching. While Actress Esther Williams, once a swimming champion herself, was busy denouncing this season's scanty suits as impractical ("Why, they come off in the water. If you can't swim in them what good are they"?), Actresses Jeanne Crain and Jean Wallace (above) were busy demonstrating some of the most complicated models yet seen. One of them (below, right) with a sketchy top and a thin ribbon holding up the shorts, seemed to illustrate Miss Williams' complaint. Called "evening bathing suits" by their designer, Bonnie Cashin, they feature a detachable skirt which makes it possible for ladies to swim at poolside parties, as well as to dance, without changing clothes. In the demonstration, which involved an interesting but modified strip tease in shedding the skirts, Miss Wallace, in a one-piece suit, danced and swam. Miss Crain, in her more treacherously supported costume, also sat and danced but wisely kept her face powder dry.

WITHOUT A SKIRT one suit becomes seaworthy as Actress Jean Wallace (Mrs. Franchot Tone) shoves off for swim. The other seems only splashworthy.

Should a woman buy a man's ties?

858 For years women have been ribbed about their taste in men's neckwear. But how ood are men at picking ties? When the name corby's came to Canada, a man chose his own neckiece. Result: a deadly dull black string tie. No onder Grandpa wore a beard!

1870 A puffy ascot, secured by a lover's-knot pin, marked a gay blade when the name Corby's was 12 years old in Canada. Later, but still before the feminine touch was felt, came a typical uninspired specimen—drab, brocaded four-in-hand . . . astride a "gates ajar" collar.

1945 Returning servicemen went all out for gaudy colors. Costly hand-painted jobs turned up frequently, as the name Corby's celebrated its 87th year in Canada. But don't blame the women—men wanted wacky hues as a relief from years of khaki.
